def Missing the Market."—This great mistake is more frequent in real estate than in commercial business. The merchant figures up his cost, puts on a living profit and is glad to sell, and takes good care not to miss the market, so as to avoid carrying dead stock. There would be less empty stores and vacant houses and fewer "for sales" up if real estate owners would meet the market fairly, and not hold out for 20 or 30 per cent more than the property is worth.
