

TO THE READER.

“So numerous a body as the Canadian Institute now is, ought to include a much greater number of working members; and the Council are led to believe that their apparent supineness arises, in part at least, from the mistaken idea that communications can only be made in the form of elaborate essays. They would strongly urge the encouragement of brief communications, in greater number, as at once more calculated to give general interest to the ordinary meetings, and to elicit such results of personal knowledge and observation as are best calculated to add to the true value of the published proceedings.

“Short notices of natural phenomena, features of local geology, objects of natural history, and the like subjects, derived from personal observation, must be readily producible by many members who have hitherto borne no active part in the Society’s proceedings, but whose contributions would most effectually promote the objects which it is designed to accomplish.”

Extract from the Annual Report of 1855.