

MEDICAL WOMEN

The increase of medical women in Great Britain is very astonishing. In London alone there are now eighty-five registered and qualified medical women, almost all of whom are in practice. Some of these hold posts in dispensaries, hospitals, infirmaries, posts as ophthalmic surgeons, assistant anaesthetists, medical examiners, inspectors and lecturers. Not only has almost every large English town a lady medico, but even remote Orkney Islands have qualified women as medical officers. The London School of Medicine for Women was only founded in 1874.—Health.
