

His talents were of a high order; his pulpit and platform efforts were carefully prepared, and always told upon the hearers.

For several months he was unable to preach, and yet he preached by his submission to the Divine will, so that his people, when visiting him, were profited, and led to trust in and praise God.

His end was eminently a peaceful one; he had been sometime expecting it, and when it came it found him ready. He died as he lived—well.

When coming to this country in company with Brethren Dunn and Swann, overtaken by a severe storm and expecting every moment to go to the bottom, he led the singing of that beautiful hymn, No. 189—"Though waves and storms go o'er my head;" and a short time before his Death Bro. Embree visited him, and repeated this favorite and apposite hymn, in which he joined, testifying that he was trusting still where he first took hold on Christ.

He died on the 8th day of May, in the 7th year of his ministry, and the 27th year of his age.

His body lies in Carbonear Cemetery waiting the resurrection unto life.
