MACHINE GUNS AND BAYONETS CHIEF WEAPONS IN STRUGGLE. (Continued from page 1.) dical London: stations last evening. Great crowds of soldiers in the front of the stations and cheered the men, most of whom had been wounded in the fighting on Saturday.

In a few cases the men were still so dazed that they were unable to tell what day it was, but in the majority of cases their condition was not very serious. It is remarkable how few men were suffering from shell or bullet wounds. Most of them were victims of the bayonet, testifying to the hand-to-hand nature of the fighting.

The soldiers had vivid stories of the battle to relate. A Gordon Highlander declared that the famous regiment had added a glorious new chapter at Mametz to its history.

"The killed and the charges," he said. "They swept over the ground and carried the first line of battered trenches without a single man falling." In the outskirts of the village, however, the Germans had concentrated a number of machine guns and a hurricane of lead was poured into the trenches, clearing them after the first line of bayonets had been pushed into the village, although it was still being shelled by artillery.

As soon as they gained a foothold, the elevation of the guns was altered and a curtain of fire poured on to the ground behind, where the enemy's supports were massing. "Every yard of the village streets was contested, but reinforcements pushed up, and by daylight the Highlanders had secured possession. "Merit is not to be judged only by success, and nobody wishes to compare the farthest points of advance with success, and nobody wishes to compare the most violent counter-attacks with the quietness of the front. They were comparatively new troops, men who had little or no experience either of the art of physical work, but they fought like veterans, with dash, infinite grit, endurance and unmovable gaiety. What a sight it must have been to see these dregs drive the enemy from his commanding high and crucial position! "The troops at his flank who fought with them and made good their great advance were farmers' boys from half a dozen Midland counties. Town and country, office and field, took hands in that great fight, and various examples of English life and blood proved their equality as notably as at Agincourt or Waterloo."
