for a legitimate end, to protect the head from cold when the natural covering is wanting, or in some way to subserve the purposes of health and comfort.

Will the whirligig of time ever agai restore the despotism of the wig? Shall we ever again be guilty of the absurdity of cutting off our own hair for the sake of paying thirty or forty guineas for the right to wear that of another person? Really, we cannot venture to decide the question in the negative, preposterous as an affirmative would appear—so easily are people to be led by the absurd tyranny of fashion.—Leisure Hour.

One of the members in the House last hight spoke of the sittings costing from ighteen hundred to two thousand do lars'a day. They cost something more as at present conducted. They sacrifice the respect which the country should feel towards its Legislature. The loss of time by means of long speeches, rambling declamations, personal squab-bles and abuse, is lamentable. It is still more lamentable to find gentlemen descending to the employment of what is not debating but mere clap trap. One member-old enough to know better and who would use very different language out of the House-ridicules nother member's "Dundreary whisk ers," and is called by implication a clown by a third. Accusations against character, veracity, honesty, are flung about with a recklessness that not even the latitude of parliamentary discussion can excuse. And in this way day after day is passed. We wonder how many of the gentlemen who resort to these stale and unprofitable devices think that they are transacting the public, business. We should like to know how far they would carry their parliamentary manners into private life. They ought to remember that Parliament is not a debating society, and even if it were, the rules of decent debating societies should be observed; and further, that every hour that is devoted to any talk but proper and business talk, is wasting the public money.—Express.
