Student cinema in a flap

Student Cinema has managed to line up a special event that has necessitated postponing Friday's showing of Trinity is Still My Name. Scheduled instead are personal appearances by Maria Campbell and Shannon Twofeathers. As an added attraction Student Cinema will also be screening Flap, a Sir Carol Reed film starring Anthony Quinn.

Maria Campbell is the author of Halfbreed which Maria Campbell is the author of Halfbreed which proved to be a great success for McCelland and Stewart. Halfbreed is the auto biography of Campbells life as a Metis, one of the forgotten people as she put it.

Miss Campbell married at fifteen to give her brothers and sisters a home that the welfare workers broke up. She tells about some of the other difficulties she encountered in growing up in her story: prostitution, alcoholism, and drug addiction to mention a few.

Her present activities are aimed at giving a strong voice to native peoples of Alberta.

Shannon Twofeathers is Maria Campbells fiance. RCA recording artist, Twofeathers admits that his singles, The Prisoner and SWEET GYPSY HAIR were both inspired by her.

Twofeathers career as a performer first took shape in 1970 when he appeared with Pete Seeger at the Clearwater Folk Festival. After that he toured with Buffy Sainte Marie before he decided to appear as a solo act.

Twofeathers credits Kristofferson, Lightfoot and Dylan as the main musical influences in his life.

Flap is based on the novel Nobody Loves a Drunken Indian by Clair Huffaker. Anthony Quinn salves the bill with Claude Akins and Shelley Winters in an unusual tale which is full of the reverberations coming from Wounded Knee

"A distinct discovery...That kind of singing is apt to be around in the future...". "He was superb" (N.Y. Times). Thus to the raves whenever critics write of the young Spanish tenor, Jose Carreras.

Mr. Carreras will sing Alfredo to Anna Moffos' Violetta in the second production of the Edmonton Opera Associations 73/74 season, "La Traviata", January 17, 19, and 21 at the Jubilee Auditorium. The production, staged by Irving Guttman, will be under the baton of Charles Rosekrans fo the Houston Grand these days.

It wouldn't be fair to give away the whole story so suffice it to say that Flap is about an Indian who gets pushed a little too far just once too often and so decides to organize the Last Great Indian Uprising. The setting is Phoneix and the whole story turns on the idea of an 1853 treaty which gave the Indians title to nearly all the land the present-day Phoenix is situated on. The situation gets sticky before the events resolve themselves and even then the resolution is neigher pleasant or definitive.

The whole affair: Flap. Twofeathers and Campbell will take place in SUB Theatre Friday, January 18 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the SUB Box Office for $1.00 in advance or $1.50 at the door.

LA TRAVIATA

Opera and will feature the Greek baritone Wassili Janulako as tl e elder Germont.

Making his professional debut with an opera company of his home town, Barcelona, Jose Carreras was immediately recognized as a major talent by his famous compatriot, Montserrat Caballe. With her he sang leads in several productions in Barcelona 1971 and in the summer of 1971 appeared with Shirley Verret in "Maria Stuarda".

He made his debut with the N.Y. City Opera as Pinkerton in 1972. Within one month he had sung the leads in Boheme, Traviata and Lucia. This past fall he made his San Francisco debut in La Boheme with Teresa Stratas.

Mr. Carreras will make his Covent Garden debut in the spring of 1974 and his Met debut that same year.

Seven of the eight secondary roles have been cast by Irving Guttman, artistic director of the Edmonton Opera Association, with Edmonton artists.

Lary Benson, in the part of "Gastone" will be making his fifth appearance with the company. He was seen last spring in "Pagliacci" and before that in Lucretia Borgia, Marriage of Figaro and Madame Butterfly. Mr. Benson sang the same role in the Winnipeg Opera production of Traviata in early November.

Its also fourth time around for baritone Ron Costley in the role of "Marquis D'Obigny". Ron will be remembered as Wagner in last falls Faust, as the villainous Sciarrone in the highly successful "Tosca" last year. He has also appeared in "Il Trovatore".

Iris Fraser is making her first solo appearance with the Edmonton Opera Association, In the part of Annina. Iris is a veteran of the chorus and was recently chosen to audition for Richard Bonynge.

Returning to the Edmonton

Returning to the Edmonton Opera Association after an absence of many years are Ron and Diane Nelsen. Diane sang the title role in the Edmontor Opera Association's initial production, Madama Butterfly, in 1963. She returned to the chorus this year for Faust and did so well that Irving Guttman immediately asked her to sing Flora in Traviata. Ron Nelsen was seen in Rigoletto in 1970 and before that in the 1965 Carmen and the 1964 Pagliacci.

La Traviata will be conducted by Charles Rosekrans of the Houston Grand Opera. The chorus is led by Alfred Strombergs. Tickets for La Traviata, January 17, 19 and 21 can be purchased at the Opera Box Office, 3rd floor in the Bay, phone 422-7200.

Students will again have the opportunity of purchasing tickets at half price one hour before curtain time.

Truckin' with Treger

Why is it that artists seem to produce their better works during the austere periods of their lives? Perhaps it is because without the putrefication of security the artist is forced to take the necessary risks that keep his or her life, and art, vital. At any rate, the audience at Saturday evening's Symphony concert witnessed the contrast between Charles Treger, a violinist who, because of his performances at previous concerts, had his listeners before he walked on stage, and Pierre Hetu the ESO's conductor, who, because of the economic 'garrot" the orchestra find's itself in, must prove the worth of a symphonic orchestra every time he raises his baton. Needless to say, it was Hetu who walked off the stage having produced the music in a manner which was certainly not flawless but which had a poignancy about it, a sense of Music of which Treger should have taken careful note.

The concert began with Luigi Boccherini's Symphony No. 16 in A Major, Op. 37, a rather stereotyped piece which did however provide a certain amount of callenge for the ESO. This is because there are times when the composer leaves only a very sparse accompaniment for his melodic passages. There is therefore no large instrumentation to hide behind and all of the musicians must be painstakingly accurate. The orchestra managed to provide a rather awkward reading of the opening movement, but in the Trio of the second movement, flautist Harlan Green and the four principal string players handled their respective passages with a good sense of timing and excellent choice coloration.

Throughout the symphony, Hetu led his orchestra through impeccable tempo and dynamic changes, but there were moments when the orchestra was noticably improperly balanced, notably in the second movement where there was too much violin sound in the accompaniment to the oboe and viola soloists, and in the third movement where a woodwind accompaniment chord was left unnecessarily bare for a impious amount of time.

Mozart's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra No. 5 in A Major really did not deserve the condesention which it received from violin soloist Charles Treger. This musician, whose advertising hype states that he studied voice for years in order that his playing of the violin would sound more like the human voice, must have studied the voice of a telephone operator reading the collected works of Immanuel Kant when he was preparing for this concerto. His rendltion of the Mozart was downright boring, if only because his phrasing was monotonus and for the most part lacked focus.

Composers like Mozart attempt to express not just a rapid series of notes, but rather a well organized musical idea. A great part of the interest that the composer creates with that idea comes from the fact that the idea evolves, it does not stagnate. Treger missed his chance to communicate that idea in its full potential to his listeners because he chose to thwart its generation. This was especially evident in his cadenza's, a place where Mozart provided him with the notes but not the meter so he had a free hand in deciding the way in which the passage could progress. Instead of choosing the points of climax and relaxation and aiming for them, Treger ran up and down the fingerboard, albeit at a remarkable speed, a feat which does not need repitition to drive the point home. He never managed to acheive a real clarity of tone, nor did he attempt to get much more than a rather standard "voice" from his Stradivaries. But he knew the audience was "in the bag", so to speak, and after their thunderous applause he just happened to have an encore, a Fiorillo study, prepared.

The ESO returned for the

The ESO returned for the second half and gave its audience a surprisingly eloquent reading of Anton Arensky's Variations of a Theme by Tchaikovsky for String Orchestra. Here the string section, almost as a rebuttal to Treger, played exceptionally well, providing some moments of exceptional sensitivity. Both the violas and the cellos in the first and second variations
