

HAMILTON INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION THIS MONTH

Event Promises to be by Far the Biggest Event of Its Kind in the History of Ambitious City.

The Industrial Exposition which is to be held in Hamilton this month, promises to be by far the best and biggest affair of this kind in the history of the city. The idea started with the board of directors of the Young Men's Christian Association to raise funds for their work, but has developed into a big civic enterprise with a hundred business men lined up in committees and sub-committees, all working enthusiastically to make Exposition a great success.

It will differ from all future Expositions in that it will have such strong attractions that the average citizens will want to attend many made up of various church choirs of the city under the directorship of Bruce A. Carey, who made the Elgar Choir such a success during the last few years. This choir has been practicing in Association Hall and taxing the seating capacity weekly.

Among the other attractions will be the Children's Chorus of one thousand voices, Tugs-of-War by the twenty or thirty teams representing local industries.

The Exposition will be held in the Armouries, both buildings will be used and every foot of floor space occupied. Nearly three-quarters of available space has been sold to merchants and manufacturers for their exhibits.

The contracts for decorating has just been let to one of the local department stores and an Electric Light Company, and will be the most elaborate decorations ever seen in Hamilton.

But Conan Doyle, who is about to spend some time in Canada, has many other claims to popular attention on this side of the Atlantic besides the conception of this great detective. It is to him more than to anyone else that his compatriots are indebted for the creation of a Court of Criminal Appeal. Until four or five years ago

Conan Doyle A Detective

Creator of Sherlock Holmes Righted Judicial Errors and Saved Victims--Gave Up Medicine for Writing.

Former United States Ambassador Joseph H. Choate, (in proposing the health of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle at a luncheon given in his honor by the Pilgrims Society of New York described him as more widely known in the United States than any other Englishman. This is undoubtedly true. For there is hardly a man, woman, or child in all America who is not acquainted with his name, as that of the creator of that world-famed sleuth, Sherlock Holmes.

But Conan Doyle, who is about to spend some time in Canada, has many other claims to popular attention on this side of the Atlantic besides the conception of this great detective. It is to him more than to anyone else that his compatriots are indebted for the creation of a Court of Criminal Appeal. Until four or five years ago woman, while his father was the son of a Parsee merchant of Bombay. After receiving his education at an English university, the father had entered the orders of the Church of England and had obtained the rectoryship of a county parish in the Midlands.

In the face of almost insuperable difficulties of an official character, partly due to red tape and partly to the determination of the government lawyers, of the presiding judge, of the members of the jury, and of the police to uphold their contention that they could not possibly have been wrong in the case of Adolph Beck, Sir Arthur Conan Doyle ended by proving that it was a case of mistaken identity.

Conan Doyle, indeed, stirred up so much popular feeling about the matter, especially when he was able to show that the unfortunate Beck had had his entire business ruined through his arrest and conviction that the government was led to make him a special grant of $15,000.

Doyle after graduation started out in medical practice at Southsea, and there published his earliest work, "A Study in Scarlet," in which Sherlock Holmes makes his debut. "The Adventure of Sheshlock Holmes" followed four years later, in 1891, and the book proved so much of a popular success that Doyle to a great extent abandoned his medical practice and devoted himself to writing novels and plays, thanks to which he is to-day a very rich man.

Sir Arthur has been twice married. His first wife died after twenty-two years of wedded happiness in 1906, and about two years later he led to the altar the present Lady Doyle, who was a Miss Jean Leckie. With her and with his two children by his first wife he makes his home in Windesham, his charming country place in Sussex, near Crowborough, while in town he divides his time between the Athenaeum and the Reform Club.

"FIGHTING JOE" PASSES ON TO HIS REWARD

A Notable Figure in British Affairs Succumbs to Long Illness.

(By Special Wire to the Court.) LONDON, July 3.—The death of Joseph Chamberlain, which was one of the most striking figures in British politics in the past generation, came as an entire surprise; the condition of his health was not widely known to be any worse than any time in the past two or three years.

Mrs. Chamberlain, who never left her husband's side since he was stricken with paralysis seven years ago, and his son, Austen Chamberlain, where with Mr. Chamberlain when death occurred at 10.30 night at his London residence, event cast a gloom to-day over London season, which was a height.

Mr. Chamberlain's last public appearance was at a garden party on the grounds of his Birmingham home on May 6 last, when, with his son, he received several hundred constituents. Mr. Chamberlain wheeled out on the lawn and appeared very emaciated and feeble. He lifted his hat to friends and laborers in acknowledgment of the salutes.

Tariff reform, which with imperialism was the chief policy for Joseph Chamberlain was spoken when enforced retirement the paralysis occurred, has suffered a most complete eclipse, his son, ten, being the only British statesman who advocates it on all occasions.

The Right Honorable Joseph Chamberlain was the pioneer of a great wave of tariff reform and imperialism in the past thirty years, with a brief interregnum, he represented Birmingham in parliament. In 1906 his career stormy activities was ended by a stroke of paralysis. The blow when he was in the midst of a strenuous campaign for the abolition of a protective tariff with preference for the British Colonies, and justice to his constituents' had, each on the thirtieth anniversary of his election.

Since that day the strong figure has been an invalid, a pathetic looker at the political game, piecemeal always with his loyal wife, a daughter of W. C. Endicott of Massachusetts who was President Cleveland's retary of war, beside him. His consolations were the growing political prominence of his son, Austen Chamberlain, and the loyalty of his constituents, Birmingham would dispose her leader, although he no longer able to represent her in the floor of the House of Commons. In each election he returned to his old seat and appeared after respectful silence, he made his way to the speaker's desk on the afternoon of January 5, 1913. Mr. Chamberlain wrote to his constituents, resigning his seat and saying:
