For the Children

The Happy Boy Who Had a Dog Named Pete.

I've got a dog. The other boys have quantities of toys and toys. And heaps of things that I ain't seen (Ain't saw, I mean). They've cars and clubs and golf sticks—I know a feller that has six.

And gee, you ought to see him drive! But I've got a dog!

I've got a dog. His name is Pete. The other children on our street have quantities of toys and toys. And heaps of things that I ain't seen (Ain't saw, I mean). They've cars and clubs and golf sticks—I know a feller that has six.

And gee, you ought to see him drive! But I've got a dog!

I've got a dog, and so, you see, I'm not at all like the other boys. They think he's such a cunning brute (I mean so cute). That's why they leave their toys and games.

And run and see about our names whenever me and Pete arrive. I've got a dog!

Plum Pudding—A Game.
The players sit at a table with a plate on it to represent a plum pudding (a tin plate would be best, being light and unbreakable). Each player takes the name of some article of food or something used at dinner. One tells a story about a plum pudding, and when he utters the name spins the plate and mentions some other dish. The person so named instantly gives the plate another twist and continues the story, spinning the plate when it begins to slow down, until he names another player, who must catch the plate before it falls, keep it going and go on with the story.

"Plum pudding" must be brought into each story and its continuation. The plate must never be allowed to fall.

The story may be something like this: "It was Christmas, and we were all at my grandmother's house. She let me help her order the dinner. Of course there was a plum pudding (spin the plate) of great size, and we all liked it better than mince pie. Mince pie must then catch the spinning plate, give it a fresh impetus and continue: "In which they showed bad taste. I think, for, while mince pies are fine at Christmas, I should prefer plum pudding to roast chestnuts."

Roast chestnuts seizes the plate and goes on: "Yes, but they are for dessert. I think plum pudding would be better than cranberry tart." And so the game goes on till all are tired or write give out.

Any one letting the plate fall or failing to continue the story pays a forfeit or leaves the game as previously arranged.

Children's Bird Party.
It was at a party that this scheme was used, and it proved so satisfactory that others wish to try the same thing. Birds drawn in sepia ornamented the invitations, and the favors were Japanese paper birds that chirped in a most natural manner.

On the wall a peacock was drawn without the tail, which was to be supplied after the manner of the old time "donkey" party. Each child was blindfolded and had three chances to supply the missing glory to this "vain" of birds. The prize to the one pinning on the most tails in the place where they should go received a copy of the "Birds Christmas Carol."

Origin of an Old Saying.
"Whole hog or none" refers to the alleged custom of Mohammed to allow his followers to eat all except one portion of a pig, which portion, however, was not specified. The result, therefore, was that if a Mohammedan did not wholly avoid the use of pork he might as well run the risk of consuming the whole hog, as he would get any portion thereof.—New York Press.

SUBSTITUTION AND WEDDINGS

Billy's Scheme Was Daring, and It Won.

By MARTHA McCULLOCH-WILLIAMS.

Elizabeth crossed the turf so lightly, no laggardly, she left a warring trail of deep green footprints athwart the dew-grazed grass. The line was blotched and half turned about, but from the last and lightest of the blotches it ran straight to the wicket gate in the hedge. The path to the gate led round almost under the library windows. Therefore she had avoided it. She did not want to be spied upon, and she thought the library commonly was empty until long after sunrise, she had come to believe there was no counting on where Miss Prudence Weir would be at any special hour.

The wicket gave upon a lane shady and secluded, yet a public passage, notwithstanding both sides of it, belonged to Elizabeth's Uncle Dan. He had been trying to close it ever since he bought the old Meers place, but his rustic neighbors had held stoutly to their right of way. So the young man walking slowly along the lane was no trespasser, albeit he walked warily, keeping close to the hedge. Elizabeth smiled shamelessly to see him. Now that she had really brought herself to a clandestine meeting she was all in a happy dither and amazed at her own hesitancy.

But she said, smiling up at her tall sweetheart: "You must go right back, Billy—must. Do you hear? Miss Prudence Weir sleeps with both ears and one eye open. Besides, she gets up early more than half the time. And you know she can make Dandy believe anything in the world, except that he ought to marry her."

"H-m! That's a pity! Skepticism an any other point would be less inconvenient," Billy Medwin panted, hurrying Elizabeth along the lane toward the woods beyond the main traveled road. It was not at all the way he should go to home, but somehow Elizabeth made no protest.

Soon they were walking through dew-sweet shade, with birds singing thin and sweet above their heads. And presently Billy had his arms about Elizabeth and was saying, with his lips close to hers: "Honey girl, I've been thinking—hard. Miss Weir is the lion in our path, and there's just one way to get around her."

"What?" Elizabeth interrupted, lifting her head a little. Billy looked up among the leaves and colored faintly as he answered: "Oh, we must get Dandy how deceitful she is. She's made him believe it would be sin to let me have you. Don't you think it would shake his faith in her if he knew she was willing to take me herself?"

"Billy," Elizabeth exclaimed, shaking with laughter, "you wouldn't dare propose to her. Can you live through a breach of promise suit? If only you could do it! But you never in the world can."

"Sure you won't be jealous?" Billy asked, pinching her ear.

She made a face at him as she answered: "Just you try it. Why, even if the worst happened—if you got tangled past getting out—I should have at least the heavenly satisfaction of knowing she had showed herself to Dandy the cat she is."

"Trust me not to get tangled," Billy protested. "What else is said is not strictly material to this narrative, although it sent Elizabeth home at last with happy eyes and the color of a wild rose."

Often fortune favors the daring. The execution began with his rescue of the pudgy Miss Weir from a runaway which was not in the least dangerous, but which gave her a mortal scare. Of course he went back with her to the gate, stopping there to explain elaborately that he had somehow incurred the displeasure of Mr. Daniel Good and been forbidden the premises. That, of course, gave him excuse to ask if he might inquire by letter after Miss Weir's health. One letter quickly and easily bred another, and from writing it was but a step to meeting either in the lane or in the wood beyond and talking of many things.

Miss Weir was rising thirty, just five years Billy's elder, but so light colored, and plump she flattered herself it looked the other way. She loved ease and consequence—witness that for five years past she had been trying to entice to marry Uncle Dandy. She had only succeeded in becoming after a sort his social watchdog.

He had a great opinion of Elizabeth, his heiress, and wanted to match her well if she was to be matched at all. Miss Weir had about lost hope of Uncle Dandy when Billy came on the scene. Billy knew pretty well all there was to know of love-making. This time he chose to make it in hypothetical fashion. He began impersonally by describing a young fellow who had set his eyes and heart upon one so far above his deserts he had become quite hopeless of winning her and had descended to trifling with mere ordinary girls by way of filling an aching void. Then he pictured the lady. Her eyes were heaven blue, her skin all lily and rose, her hair like spun sunshine, her voice a flute. But that was as nothing beside her loftier charms—her soul, her spirit, her angelic nature—which made a mere ordinary sinner grovel in dust whenever he let himself feel what he merely it was to love her. Thus far Billy got by the end of the second week. Naturally it was but little later that the lady was forced to discover herself in the fair unknown.
