"I don't believe it's for him that I am crying," she thought, as she tried in vain to stay her tears; "I always intended to hate him, and I most know I do; I'm only feeling badly, because I won't run away, and Henry and Rose will go without me so soon!" And fully satisfied at having discovered the real cause of her grief, she laid her head upon the bright autumnal grass and wept bitterly, holding her breath and listening intently as she heard, in the distance, the sound of the engine which was bearing Mr. Carrollton away.

It did not occur to her that he could not yet have, reached the depot, and as she knew nothing, of a change in the time of the trains, she was taken wholly by surprise when, fiften minutes later, a manly form bent over her, as she lay upon the bank, and a voice, earnest and thrilling in tones, murmured softly, "Maggie, are those tears for me?"

When about half-way to the station Mr. Carrollton had heard of the change of the time, and knowing he should not be in season, had turned back, with the intention of waiting for the next train, which would pass in a few hours. Learning that Maggie was in the woods, he had started in quest of her, going natarally to the mossy bank, where, as we have seen, he found her weeping on the grass. She was weeping for him—he was sure of that. He was not indifferent to her, as he had sometimes feared, and for an instant he left tempted to take her in his arms and tell her how dear she was to him.

"I will speak to her first," he thought, and so he asked "if the tears were for him?"

Thexpressibly astonished and mortified at having him see her thus. Maggie started to her feet, while earny words at being thus intruded "I don't believe it's for him that

Inexpressibly astonished and mortified at having him see her thus. Maggie started to her feet, while angry words at being thus intruded upon trembled on her lips. But, winding his arm around her, Mr, Carrollton drew her to his side, explaining to her in a few words how he came to be there, and continuing: "I do not regret the delay, if by its means I have discovered what I very much wish to know. Maggie, le you care for me? Were you lo you care for me? Were you weeping because I had left you?"

He drew her very closely to himlooking anxiously into her face, which she covered with her hands.
She knew he was in earnest, and the knowledge that he loved her thrilled her for an instant with indescribable happiness. A moment, however, and thoughts of her engagement with

It was his first attempt at love-making, and very much disheartened he walked slowly back to the house; and while looking to see if he were coming, he, from the parlor window, was watching, too, for her, with a shadow on his brow and a load upon his heart. Madam Conway knew that some-thing was wrong, but it was in vain that she sought for an explanation. Mr. Carroliton kept his own secret, and, consoling herself with his volun-teered assurance that in case it became necessary for him to return to England, he should, before embark-ing, visit Hillsdale, she bade him a

In the meantime, Maggie, having given up all hopes of again seeing Mr. Carrollton, was waiting impatiently the coming of Hagar, who, was absent, having, as Maggie, readily conjectured, gone to Richland.
It was long past noon when she returned, and by that time the stainshad disappeared from Maggie's face,

Here is mother of those remarkable cures of torturing, disfiguring skin humour daily made by Cutteurs Resolvent, assisted by Cutteurs Colument and Soop, after physicians, hospitals and all cles had failed.

"I feel it my duty to try to help those suffering from skin diseases. My case was a very bad one, covering all of one side of my face and had reached my eye. I had two or three dectors protectle without any relief. They said my disease was Epithelloms. I was then advised to go to one of our hospitals, which I did, taking their treatment for some time. I had given up all hope when my humband asked me to try the Cuticura Remedies. My face being in such a very bad state, I used though the sufficient of the Resolvent four times a day. They acted like a charm, and in one week's time my face was cured on the cuticura Remedies. My face being in such a very bad state, I used to try the Cuticura Remedies. She had watched Maggie closely, and felt sure that her affection for Henry Warner was neither deep nor lasting. Arthur Carrollton's presence had done much toward weakening it, and a few months more would suffice to wear it away entirely. Still, from what had passed, the faciled that supposition alone that forced that supposition alone. tirely. Still, from what had passed, she fancied that opposition alone would only make the matter worse by rousing Maggie at once. She knew far more of human nature than either of the young people before her; and after a little reflection she suggested that Henry should leave Maggie with her for a year, during which time no communication whatever should pass between them, while she would promise faithfully not to influence Margaret either way.

"If at the end of the year," said she, "you both retain for each other the feelings you have now, I will no longer object to the marriage, but will make the best of it."

At first Henry spurned at the pro-

At first Henry spurned at the pro-position, and when he saw that Mar-garet thought well of it, he reproach ed her with a want of feeling, say-ing, "she did not love him as she ing, "she did not love him as she had once done."
"I shall not forget you, Henry," said Maggie, coming to his side and taking his hand in hers, "neither will you forget me, and when the year has passed away, only think how much pleasanter it will be for us to be married here at home, with Henry rather ungraciously yielded the point, promising to leave Maggie free for a year, while she, too, promised not to write either to him or to Rose, except with her grandmother's consent. Maggie Miller's word once passed, Madam Conway knew it would not be broken, and she unhesitatingly left the young people together while they said their parting words. A message of love from Maggie to Rose-a hundred protestations of eternal fidelity, and then they parted; Henry, sad and disappointed, slowly wending his way back to the spot where Hagar impatiently awaited his coming, while Maggie; leaning from her chamber window, and listening to the sound of his retreating footsteps, brushed away a tear, wondering the while why it was that she felt so relieved.

CHAPTER XVI.

Half in sorrow, half in joy, old Hagar listened to the story which Henry told her, standing at the cotage door. In sorrow, because she had learned to like the young man, learned to think of him as Maggie's nusband, who would not wholly cust ner off, if her secret should chance to be divulged; and in joy, because her, idol would be with her yet a little longer.

her idol would be with her yet a little longer.

"Maggie will be faithful quite as long as you," she said, when he expressed his fears of her forgetfulness; and trying to console himself with this assurance, he sprang into the carriage in which he had come, and was driven rapidly away.

He was too late for the night express, but, taking the early morning train, he reached New York just as the sun was setting.

"Alone! my brother, alone?" quered Rose, as he entered the private parlo, of the hotel where she was staying with her aunt.

"Yes, alone," pust us I expected," he answered, somewhat bitterly.

in her narrow berth, she listened to the swelling sea, as it dashed against the vessel's side. Many a fond remembrance, too, she gave to Maggie Miller, who, in her woodland home, thought often of the travelers on the sea, never wishing that she was with them, but experiencing always a feeling of pleasure in knowing that she was Maggie Miller yet, and should be until next year's autumn leaves were falling.

Of Arthur Carrollton she thought frequently, wishing she had not been so rude that morning in the woods, and feeling vexed because, in his letters to her grandmother, he merely said, "Remember me to Margarett."
