Legal Decisions

1. Any person who takes a paper regularly from the Post Office—whether differently from his name or another's or whether he has subscribed or not—is responsible for its payment.

2. If a person orders his paper discontinued, he must pay up all arrears, or the publisher may continue to send it until payment is made, and collect the whole amount, whether the paper is taken from the office or not.

3. The courts have decided that refusing to take newspapers and periodicals from the Post Office, or removing and leaving them uncalled for is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.

A well-known PHYSICIAN
RECOMMENDED

Skoda's Discovery

for my wife, which she has taken with the most satisfactory results.
This led me to try Skoda's German Soap, as I was troubled with a great deal of it, a sensitive face which shaming would irritate.

Skoda's German Soap has entirely rid me of this trouble. For softening and clearing up the skin one has only to try it to appreciate its superiority over all others.

Skoda's Discovery
makes you eat, it makes you sleep, it makes you well. Medical advice free.

POETRY.

The Sweet Old Song.

It was only a broken chord of song That sang itself, the living day, Over and over in my heart,
And always the same sweet way—Always beginning low and soft, Like a tenderly spoken "Love, goodnight!"

And ending in glad and joyous strains, Like a morning psalm when the world is bright.

And the hours of the day were woven in By the mystic thread of the haunting song,
That somewhere out of the vanished past, Sent forth its witchery clear and strong;

Something akin to the song of birds When the sky is flushed with the coming dawn!

Yet sad as the thoughtful hour which comes When the last red light of the day is done.

Beautiful echo that drifted back From the far-off shore of long ago, Over the wide and rugged waste, Where never the winds of gladness blow,
Bringing the odor of wildwood flowers
The laughing song of the mountain lark;
The green, glad fields where the cowling grow.

And the gleam of waters calm and still,
Sitting alone in the twilight still, Whose mantle covers the earth with gray,
My heart is touched, and my eyes grow dim.

As the glow of the sunset fades away,
And I feel the presence of the unseen guests
That out of the shadowy regions throng,
And I know they have crossed from the further shore
On the slender thread of the sweet old song.

SELECT STORY.

At the World's Mercy.

BY FIGURE WARDEN.

CHAPTER XVIII.—Continued.

But, in my weak state of mind, I could not bear it; and the next day I was again by my darling's grave. Towards evening, as I sat there, quite still and hopeless, I heard a footstep in the churchyard. I had not curiosity enough to turn my head to see who had entered. At last a man stood by my side. It was Eugene Barach.

"Why have you come?" I asked almost unconsciously.

He did not answer at once. He was looking at me so tenderly, so pitifully, that I was moved out of my sympathy, but only into anger that any man but myself should dare to look at me so.

"Here you come to torment me again now?"

"No," said he gently. "I came to try to comfort you; and I will leave you this moment, if you please. Remember, your grief is truly misplaced. I would have given the world to save him."

"This was true. I remembered what he had done; and in misery and shame I leaned against the headstone and burst into weak tears.

"Yes, yes; and you did save him —for a little while. Indeed I am not ungrateful to you," I sobbed, letting my handkerchief fall.

He picked it up. I was quivering all over from weakness, and he supported me and tried to dry my eyes. But the action was the very same as that of Hubert on that winter afternoon on the common; and I shrank away from his touch.

"Don't—oh, don't! He did that,
and you have no right to comfort me.
You are not loyal." I burst out, wounded, and in my selfish anger trying to wound back.

"I am free now," said he gently.
"I did not mean to hurt you. Only I know you are doing yourself harm and wasting away under your sorrow, and for your own sake and his sake I want you to be brave, and to face the world again, hard though it is, I know.
And—and," he went on, his face giving way a little, "I want you to remember that there are—perhaps not very many, but just a few people in the world who are ready to do all they can to shield you and care for you; and, if the world cannot be a happy place to you any longer, at least they would smooth the rough path for you as much as possible." He stopped. I was touched at last.
I said mournfully—

"You are very, very good to me, and I am very hard and selfish; but I will try to thank you when I get better.

I am not quite well yet, I think. My head is weak, and I don't quite know always what I am saying. And you are quite right; I ought to try to rouse myself—and out to think. And now they are going to take me away.
Oh, don't let them take me
