A Legend of Good St. Valentine.

t. Valentine at Peter's gate
Did knock with might and main,
Let me out for once, ere 'tis too
My time has come again."

Then Peter slowly turned the key
And let the good saint go,
It was the fourteenth of Februaree,
And the ground was white with snow

The saint he smiled as he paced Broadway, His teeth gleamed clear and pearly, For he actually hadn't been out in broad day
Since in the third century—early.

"But love," thought he, " and life and youth
Are surely the same as of yore,
'll just go around and discover the truth.
And make things as nice, if not more."

He hardly expected to be amused When he paid his first morning call; But the ladies "begged to be excused," They'd been all night a a ball.

So the saint in wonder turned away, And bravely tried once more: But here they all had visits to pay, And the footman showed him the door. But he still kept on, and tried all kinds-The good, the grave, the busy; He saw all sorts of brains and minds, Till they fairly turned him dizzy.

For one was practising Mendelssohn Alone in her maiden bower; Another was carving an old dry bone, While a third read Schopenhauer. A fourth in water and oils could paint All things beneath and above;

A fifth in good works was a perfect saint; But they'd none of them time to love. Sadly St. Valentine floated back
To the gate of good St. Peter.
"Alas!"cried he, "of girls there's no lack,
And I must say I seldom saw sweeter.

But they don't seem to be remantic." Then St. Peter clanged the brazen gate,

'They're good and pretty, gay and wise;

And let in the dear old sinner, Who'd been up early and staid out late, And probably wanted his dinner. MORAL. pray, sweet maids and youths, beware, And mind what you're about;

For now the saint's around, take care,

Don't let him "find you out."

attention to those of the party that still bears the name of Liberal who tell us that Mr. Blake is not in carnest, that he is now as much of a free trader as ever he was, and that he only pretends to favor projection just now to enable him the more easily to dish the Tories. He sees that the man who takes up a policy that he does not believe in to dish the Tories will, whenever it suits his purpose, do the same thing to humbug the Liberals. The more he thinks over the matter the greater is his dissatisfaction with Mr. Blake's turning and twisting on the trade question, and he naturally comes to the conclusion that if he must support a party that is to continue to carry out the N. P. he will rather vote for the party that established it and is honestly in favor of it than for the men who do not believe it but merely use it as a bat treagch yoles with.
