very closely allied to the development of her back bone and its appendages. The cow of large dairy performance is one that shows large spinal proportions and spinal cord. The heads of great milking cows are always fine and bony, with large protruding eyes, and a strong jointing of spinal column to the head. The back should be roof like; never flat back that obscures the spinal processes. The ribs should spring rafter like away from the back bone, and be far apart, and so give an open expression to the barrel of the cow. At the hip, the back bone should rise and give a high pelvic arch. This indicates a strong maternal action, indicative of strength and roof for the office of maternity. The long tail is a good sign, as it tells of a continuation of the spinal process, and the best cow has the longest, immest tail. A short distance further on, one is fully rewarded for the ride by the highly picturesque view of the Pokiok falls and the deep rocky gorge, now icicle margined, through which its waters rush and tumble in their haste to mingle with those of the noble St. John. Four miles further on is the mouth of the Shogomoc. A writer to the St. John Sun, in speaking of the Shogomoc land says that the lumber on the lands has been greatly destroyed by the Saxby Gale and fires and that it is difficult to get the lumber to market. In this he has made a mistake, nasmuch as the Saxby Gale never eached as far up as the Shogomoc and only some three or four hundred acres of the land has been touched by the fire not very much out of about 11,000 acres. And furthermore there is not any trouble to speak of in getting the lumber out to the river St. John; the lands being only about four miles from the river. This can be substantiated by the very oath The following letter from Peter Woods, C. E., speaks for itself:

GRAF UNDER THE LASH.

Turnkey Macaulay Administers Twenty Stripes for Indecent Assault.

The young mulatto, Frederick Graf, received his first whipping of twenty lashes in St. John on Monday afternoon, at 2.30

Ever since the trial, when the enormity of his vile offence was made known to Graf, the first instalment of the penalty has ever been before him, and it is impossible to picture his feelings when Monday morning he awoke to the realization that the day had come.

As early as 2 p. m. those to whom passes had been sent began to arrive. A few minutes before the appointed time there assembled in the jailor's room, besides Mr. Rankin, sheriff Harding, Dr. James Christie, chief of police Clark, city marshal McPherson, Turnkey Macaulay and Clifford and the reporters for the

The jailer, in the interval, entertained the visitors with a story of a dog which had pulled all of the feathers from a chicken belonging to him. The sheriff and Dr. Christie then Proceeded to Graf's Cell. where the physician examined the prisoner. It was found that Graf's heart was somewhat excited, no doubt from his anticipation of the punishment. On the return of the doctor and sheriff Harding, the party waited until the time was up, and sharp on the close of the half hour, at the jailer's signal, slowly climbed the stairs leading to the upper corridor. There, upper part of his body entirely bared, and his face wearing a sullen expression not unmixed with apprehension. He had socks only on his feet. So far as could be judged, the fear of the ordeal weighed greater on his mind than its degradation. Beyond merely glancing at their faces as they ascended the stairs. he paid no attention to the visitors, the short time which intervened between the arrival of the party and the operation. being occupied by him in clutching the bars a little higher with his hands, or occasionally moved in his uncomfortable position, Graf seemed to be of a very athletic build, the muscles of his back and neck bulging out prominently, and his biceps being also well developed, for his

The party having formed in a sort of crescent, the sheriff instructed Turnkey Clifford to tally, and then gave the word to Turnkey Macaulay, who advanced to within four feet of Graf, holding in his hand, the whip, a stick of wood about a foot in length, to which was attached six whip cords tapering from 1-5 of a inch in when Mr. Macaulay drew back and raised was laid on with considerable swing.

though the corridor was rather dusky, purple marks where the lashes had been struck could be plainly seen upon the prisoner's back, extending from the bottom of the left shoulder blade to the top of the right one. From the eighth to the finishing stroke, Graf apparently made Piper — They went down into the no sound, as all that was heard was the cession. As the 20th was spoken, and the whip smote the discolored flesh, the prisoner gave a long drawn sigh. It was then seen that a large drop of blood had oozed weakness and debility and my system from one of the wounds, and that the would not be without it for a great deal. the marks very distinctly. When Graf cell, No. 18, and flinging the door open angrily, walked to the window of the apartment and stood sullenly looking out. The door was then closed and secured.

Dr. Christie afterwards took up lint and ointment, and dressed the wounds. It was his opinion that the whipping was a pretty severe one, and he said that had it been more so, the result might have been different.

Turney Macaulay, when spoken to, remarked that the task was a very unpleas-
