The Evening Chit-Chat

By RUTH CAMERON

"Are your tools sharp enough?"

It seems to me that is a question which ought not to be left wholly to the workman who saws, or files, or carves, or cuts real materials, but should be asked also by all of us who are building, or trying to build, our structure of achievement and success.

Once in so often I think all of us ought to sit down, examine all the tools we are working with, and ask ourselves, "Are they in the best possible condition? Are they sharp enough?"

For instance, how about the most wonderful and delicate tool that God has given man—eyes. In what condition are they? Is your tool of eyesight blunted by improper use, dulled by a failure to provide it with a necessary auxiliary, or is it as keen as science and care can make them?

What about your stomach? More than anything else, I fancy, the stomach is allowed to become a blunted tool, working harm where it should combine with the other tools to work good.

How about your tool of personal appearance? Such a wonderful, such an important tool. Do you give it the careful daily polishing and sharpening of absolute personal cleanliness, of minute attention to all that goes to make a man or woman well groomed; of painstaking selection and care of your clothes, that this tool needs to keep it efficient?

How about the tools of handwriting and diction? Are they both as sharp as they should be? I once knew a young man who started on his business career well equipped in all but handwriting. He was quick, intelligent, of good address, and full of ideas, but he wrote a scraggly unbusiness-like hand. He might have said, "I can succeed by the use of my other sharp tools, even if this one does happen to be dull." But he didn't. He wasn't that kind. Instead he said, "I want all my tools sharp." That is, I don't suppose he said just that, but he lived it. For he spent three evenings a week all through his first winter in business at a commercial night school, struggling with his penmanship, and sallied forth with all his tools sharp. Which is pretty nearly why, I fancy, that at thirty his structure of achievement towers far above that of any of his classmates, who were contented to have a few sharp tools and let the rest be dull.

How about your tool of system and orderliness? When I hear of a fairly successful business man working at an untidy desk, and in haphazard fashion, instead of being impressed as so many people are by the fact that a man can succeed despite untidiness and lack of system, I always think sadly how much more successful he might have been had his tool of system and order been sharp.

There are just a few suggestions. There are many tools that he who would rear a fair temple of achievement, must keep bright and keen. A little thought will tell you what they are in your case.

—Are you keeping them so?

Remedies are Needed

Were we perfect, which we are not, medicines would not often be needed. But since our systems have become weakened, impaired and broken down through indiscretions which have gone on from the early ages, through countless generations, remedies are needed to aid Nature in correcting our inherited and otherwise acquired weaknesses. To reach the seat of stomach weakness and consequent digestive troubles, there is nothing so good as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, a glyceric compound, extracted from native medicinal roots—sold for over forty years with great satisfaction to all users. For Weak Stomach, Biliousness, Liver Complaint, Pain in the Stomach after eating, Heartburn, Bad Breath, Belching of food, Chronic Diarrhea and other Intestinal Derangements, the "Discovery" is a time-proven and most efficient remedy.

You can't afford to accept a secret nostrum as a substitute for this non-alcoholic, medicine or known composition, not even though the urgent dealer may thereby make a little bigger profit.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets regulate and invigorate stomach, liver and bowels. Sugar-coated, tiny granules, easy to take as candy.

Fads and Fashions.

Hats do not match gowns.

Afternoon frocks escape the ground.

Butterfly motifs are extensively used.

Wide stitching is again in vogue for girls.

There has been a revival of silver filigree.

Silk gloves come in all colors and in all lengths.

Some of the newest raincoats are made with capes.

Changeable silks were never more used than at this minute.

No one longer sees the stiff-boned collar in the evening.

Crocheted handings are again trimming summer coats and gowns.

For all styles of hair dressing parted hair is very popular.

Some of the chiffon veils are hemstitched on all four sides.

Many of the new sashes are edged with fringe and silk tassels.

Parasols and stockings match the gown, whether the shoes do or not.

White wash ribbons are fast replacing the colored ones for lingerie.

Changeable taffetas are in high favor for little summer afternoon frocks.

The fringe appears on wraps, the lower edge of skirts, hats and parasols.

Deep hems with design of silk-colored cords are put in many kinds of gowns.

Tailor-made of silk and satin are seen more and more as the season advances.

Chiffon embroidered with chenille for a gauzy evening wrap is quite effective.

A Round Trip on the Steamer Susu.

BY C. R. D.

On Tuesday evening, June 1st, after the usual preparations which one makes for travel, I proceeded to Crosbie & Co's. wharf and on boarding the steamer I was met by the chief steward, who politely escorted the writer to number five stateroom, where placed my luggage, and returned to the deck to await the departure of the ship.

At 4 p.m. we started out from the pier with a stiff breeze blowing from the N.W., and after the usual waving of handkerchiefs we headed for the Narrows, where the last glimpse of St. John's city was obtained. We were how passing Cable Cove and running down the shore at a lively rate, and at 5 p.m. we passed Torbay Head, which is a very prominent point of land rising to a height of three hundred feet. As the wind was a kind of cold, we went to the smoking room where we passed the time until tea hour playing cards and draughts. The ringing of the bell called us to the saloon, where we sat down and did full justice to the good things placed before us. Tea being over we returned to the deck and were surprised to find that we had passed Cape St. Francis in such a short time.

It was now 7 o'clock, and the great orb of day was sinking behind the north shore of Conception Bay, sending its golden rays across the sea as it gradually disappeared from our view.

There is always something to engage one's attention when travelling, and this voyage was no exception, for, when steaming through Baccalieu Tickle, we sighted several large whales, which were continually crossing our bows, sending showers of spray into the air.

We are now in Trinity Bay.

About 9 o'clock we sighted the little five miles aster, and the captain slowed down in order to have a race to Catalina, which proved very exciting. The two ships now went at full speed. Sometimes we took the lead, but at 11 o'clock the race ended, Reid's boat winning by two hundred feet.

After landing a considerable amount of freight at Catalina and taking on some passengers, we shaped our course for Greenspond, where we arrived 6 o'clock the following morning. The above mentioned place has some very fine buildings, and is an ideal spot for anyone who desires to spend a cheap holiday. Our next port of call was Poo's Island, which place we entered shortly after breakfast. We delayed only a short time at the Island, and as the steamer did not go to the wharf, we were unable to visit the place. We are now bound for Wesleyville, and as there is a public wharf there we landed and had a short walk around this town.

By dinner time we had called to Newtown, and during the evening we made about seven or eight small ports, among them being the Wadhams, which is a very wild and desolate Island.

The scenery to be met with in Notre Dame and Gander Bays is second to none on this side of the Atlantic. Almost everywhere the trees grow to the water's edge, and the numerous islands with which these bays are studded lend an enchantment to the view.

On Thursday night at 8.30 we arrived at Change Islands, our last port of call, and the night being dark and foggy the captain decided to remain there until daylight.

When I awoke on the following morning we were steaming south. The weather was very disagreeable and raining in torrents; there was also a terrible gale of wind blowing. About 10 o'clock we arrived at Seldom, which, in my opinion has the grandest scenery of any harbor we had then seen. There was four passengers taken on here, among them being an hon. member for Placentia, who is, no doubt, a very fine man.

On Saturday we had a rough time, and the steamer proved herself a very fine seaboat. We did not make much headway that day, having to "put up" at Wesleyville Saturday night. By 1 o'clock on Sunday morning we were steaming into Greenspond, at which place we booked five passengers for St. John's, two of whom being a doctor and a bank clerk; the latter had been spending his vacation with his parents who own a large store at this settlement. Coming from Greenspond to Catalina we passed several large bergs, which were born on Greenland's icy mountains, drifting south to meet their doom in the warm waters of the Gulf stream.

At Catalina we went on shore with the mailman, and after walking some distance arrived at the post office, where he delivered the mail. The roads in this place are very fine, and equal, if not better, than the streets in the city.
