Famous False Starts.

Men of Genius Who Began in the Wrong Groove.

Your butcher, your baker, your candlestick maker, never mistakes his vocation; believing in the value of experience, he starts young, and sticks to his job. On the other hand, it is a remarkable fact that men of genius rarely start life in their proper groove. They are the rolling stones, though whether or not they gather moss is another matter. It would seem to be the rule that a man of genius doing some incompatible task, wearing himself out in some irksome profession or trade, before the discovery of his real bent is vouchsafed.

Look at Goldsmith, for example. He was at the same time one of the greatest literary men and one of the worst doctors that ever lived. Unfortunately his medical experience came first. Sir Joshua Reynolds' canvases rarely come into the market in these days, but when they do, people jostle each other for the right to pay thousands of pounds for them—and the artist's father gave his brilliant son an education that was devised to serve him in the capacity of medical practitioner!

Similarly, Darwin, the king of naturalists, studied medicine at Edinburgh; the results, however, were so unsatisfactory that he drifted to Cambridge with an eye on the church. It was only at the end of his career there (which he himself described as "reckless") that he became serious, and, as we know, brilliantly scientific. The case of Sir A. Conan Doyle indicates that the old order changes not; for he actually practised eight years in Southsea before putting aside the scalpel for the pen.

Many instances are on record of men originally intended for the church turning to secular occupations. Darwin was one of these. Burne-Jones, in his own day, a leader of a new art movement, only took to painting pictures when his theological education was far advanced. In so much as a great deal of his artistic work is characterized by a strong religious note, it would seem that his discarded profession became a useful factor in that which he finally adopted. Constable, one of the brightest particular stars of English landscape painting, was a similar case. Before devoting himself to art, however, he served a term as a miller in his father's business.

Many men spend their lives in businesses with the secret conviction that their real aptitude lies in some particular profession; a few, with the courage of their convictions, actually risk everything in the attempt to do the work they can enjoy. To this class belong George Alexander, the well-known actor and G. R. Sims, the equally well-known journalist, both of whom tilted (with considerable success) in the first instance in the city.

Schoolgirl's Exhausted Nerves

Headaches, Dizzy Spells and Weakness Overcome by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

At about the age that most girls are working hardest at school, studying for examinations there are important physiological changes taking place which are an additional strain on the nervous system.

Mrs. J. A. Gallop, 135 Victoria street, St. John, N.B., whose husband is a carpenter, states:—"We have used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food in our family for nervousness, headaches, dizziness and nervous dyspepsia, and have found them satisfactory in every particular. My daughter Bessie was going to school, and became quite run down in health. By the time she had used three boxes of this remedy her nerves were steady, her general health was excellent and she was entirely free from headaches and dizzy spells. We are more than pleased with the results of this treatment. "More recently we used the Nerve Food for my granddaughter, who was out of school for nearly a year from nervous trouble, and noticed improvement in her condition at once." ## Wonders of Kinoplastikon.

Remarkable Cinema Performance at The Scala Theatre.

A few weeks ago the Daily Graphic was able to give a forecast of what Kinoplastikon was to be. Kinoplastikon has come, and it more than justifies what was written about it. There is only one word for the display—"Wonderful!"

"Wonderful" is the word in every body's mouth at the Scala Theatre as the Kinoplastikon figures go through their performances, dancing, dancing and bowing in response to the audience's applause. "Do you mean to tell me these are not real people?" is the question repeatedly asked by the spectators, and the wise man who goes thinking that he knows all about it has to be repeatedly reminding himself that the figures are the creation of the camera, and not things of flesh and blood.

They are projected, these Kinoplastikon figures, on to a fully-lighted stage. There is no sheet as is usual with cinematograph pictures. The actors appear to make their entrances from the wings. They are not fat, as pictures usually are, but they are plastic and lifelike. The figures make their bow; the orchestra strikes up, and—most uncanny of all the wonders—the pictures begin to sing! The movements of the figures and the "voice" are in perfect synchronization, and the orchestra is in perfect time with both. Here, perhaps, we may offer one word of suggestion to the Kinoplastikon producers. The illusion would be even more remarkable if the "voice" could be placed nearer than it is to the figures.

Kinoplastikon is the most extraordinary advance in cinematography it is possible to imagine, but it is as yet in its infancy, and we are promised more wonderful developments in time. At present the spectacle is somewhat ghostly, as all the figures shown are of a ghastly whiteness, and their faces are of ashen hue. When time has solved the problem of getting a little flesh tint into Kinoplastikon faces, and when we have more color and variety in the dress of the figures it will indeed be difficult to discern between the thing of life and its Kinoplastikon presciment.

Turned On The Joker.

The French critic, musician, and Government official, Romieu, was fond of joking. One of his diversions—amusing, but not to be commended—was to go into some shop where he thought he was not known, and perplex the shopmen by his questions and remarks.

One evening he had taken a good deal of wine, when he went into a little watchmaker's shop, and, assuming the accent and air of a countryman, said:

"Sir, what do you call these little machines hanging there?" "Watches," replied the shopkeeper. "What are they for?"

"To indicate the time." "Really? I have heard of them. How much do they cost?"

"Here is one for two hundred francs, and one for a hundred francs; and here are some for fifty and twenty five francs."

"Are there printed directions about making them go?"

"No; they have to be wound up every day with a key."

"Will you show me how, sir?" "This way. You see it is not difficult."

"And must one wind it in the evening or in the morning?" "You must wind yours in the morning."

"Why in the morning?" "Because in the evening you are drunk, M. Romieu, and might break it."

No more the skipper bold will shout in language that is impolite: "Starboard your wheel, you lazy lout!" Instead he'll say: "Turn to the right."

"Cast off that line!" once roared the mate; "Don't stand there, like a sleepy dog." But now the deck hands all await "The order to 'Untie that rope!'"

It may have puzzled some to know just what was meant by "douse the gill." But now where briny waters flow, The order is the "Hut to dim."

"All hands aloft," the captain cries. And at delay he roars and swears; In future when storm terrifies, He'll say: "You boys go 'right upstairs.'"

"Shiver my timbers!" is taboo; "Avast!" is dumped into the sea; Our sailors now are in a stew For fear "in stays" will "corsets" be.

The language of the sea was terse; Old seamen spoke in glib and free; But now the farm hands can converse On subjects nautical, b'gee. —Exchange.

A Labouchere Anecdote

A Labouchere anecdote which has not been done to death is given in the new volume of recollections by Sir Henry Lucy ("Toby, M.P."), to whom it was told by Labby himself. It concerned the younger son of a peer, who thought that a berth in the Diplomatic Service was as desirable a place as any for one who took life rather easily. He knew nothing of the special subjects upon which the preliminary examination was based, but there was at least the promise of a lark. As far as he could make out, he did not supply a single correct answer to the long list of questions. Nevertheless, he came out first in the competition. It was a surprise even for a confident young lordling. Meeting one of the examiners at a dinner a few days later, he ventured to ask how the thing came about. "We at once saw you knew nothing," was the reply. "But your manner was so free from constraint under what to some people would have been peculiarly embarrassing circumstances that we said to each other, 'That's the very man to make a diplomatist.' So we gave you a start on your career."

Tit for Tat.

Amongst the peculiar marriage customs of the world may be classed that which prevails in Brittany. When the wedding ceremony is over it is the practice for the lord and master to give his bride a sound box on the ear, and to say as he gives it:—

"That is how it feels when you make me vexed." After this most unlover-like proceeding he greets her with an ardent kiss, and tenderly utters the words:—"And thus it feels when you treat me well."

A Breton once had the temerity to link his fortunes with those of a German lass, and, nothing daunted, gave her the usual salute on retiring from the altar. But he had mistaken his girl; and the stout-hearted damsel, ignorant of the custom, did not wait for the kiss, but dealt her swain a resounding clout on the side of his face and exclaimed with emphasis:—

"Look here, Jean; you had better understand, once for all, I'll have none of that!"

The young fellow, sadder and wiser, rubbed his cheek, and left the church with the settled belief that he had, without doubt, a better half who would stand no nonsense.
