A majority of the striking plush weavers at John & James Dobson's mills, Philadelphis, have voted to return to work. For ten weeks over 400 hands have stayed away from their looms because, as they claimed, their employers imported English weavers to drive them out of the business. For five years the Dobsons claim, they have been trying to get good velvet plush from American workmen, but had failed. A number of hands were brought from England for the purpose of educating the firm's old hands. The plan of the Dobsons was misunderstood by the old weavers, who thought they were to be discharged. The long strike was thus precipitated.
