A Lover's GERARDINE: Romance.

Lindley recovered his self-possession as he noted his companion's composure in face of Captain Morrison's strange, grave and monotonous manner, which to his experienced eyes suggested danger.

"Perhaps you are right, Sir James; he lived for some time under your care, and you have opportunities of studying both his character and his constitution than I have had."

Lindley turned pale, and his hands began to twitch and to tremble; the new Sir James remained perfectly calm; both the ladies kept still as statues under the strongest efforts at self-control.

"I must repeat once more, Sir James," continued Captain Morrison, whose speech grew slower and more deliberate every minute, "that, had the story of your noble and disinterested conduct remained unsupported, it would have appeared scarcely credible; but, in order that for once poetical justice should be awarded to an heroic act, heaven has raised up a witness to the truth of your story whom no one will dare to doubt, James Otway."

He called, raising his voice a little, "come forward and give your benefactor the thanks which are his due."

Captain Morrison fixed his eyes upon the screen thrust back into the corner of the room; and the last words were scarcely out of his mouth when every one turned instinctively, as they heard a sound behind them. A moment later, pale, shaking from head to foot, and looking, as he turned, nervously forward into the room, the sturdiest wretch that ever skulked about the name of James Otway appeared before them.

Lindley leaped to his feet with a hoarse cry. Elizabeth burst into tears; Geraldine sprang forward and sank down beside her husband's couch. Of the four people, only this apparition surprised, only the new claimant to the title retained his self-possession.

He grew white, his eyes traveled stealthily from door to window; but neither passage was free; and he turned toward the new-comer and looked at him defiantly.

"Do you mean to deny," he began, coolly, "that I am Sir Charles' legitimate son, and consequently the lawful possessor of the title?"

"No," answered James, who could not face him, but stood next to the corner of his hand and his feet, and glancing restlessly about him, "I don't deny it. I only deny that you are not a murderer or injured another man's wife—and heaven forgive you—for all you have made suffer."

He sank down into the nearest chair, utterly overcome, and, turning away his head, let it fall on his hands; he was unable to bear the sight of the friend he had trusted almost to the death, after the last two sickening disclosures concerning him.

"I really don't understand all this—this is of the nature of a farce," cried the new Sir James, rising coolly. "Perhaps an interview with a lawyer, and another with a couple of policemen will bring the snivelling idiot to reason. In the meantime, we are intruding upon you to no purpose, Captain Morrison, and we will not further trespass upon you until I am able to prove, with the aid of Mr. Massey and my other witnesses, the truth of the statements I have made today."

"I want no further proof," said Captain Morrison, whose eyes had lost their hard look for a moment as they fell upon his wife crouching beside the sofa, on which he lay. "But I have something to say to you privately; and if you can spare me a few moments I promise not to detain you longer."

Geraldine looked up in alarm. "Mr. Fielding, I am sorry your visit should have been spoiled by this unpleasant scene. Geraldine will do your best to entertain your cousin and Mr. Fielding, while Sir James and I have a few minutes' conversation; Miss Otway will help you, I am sure."

Geraldine rose obediently from her knees, and with one faltering, imploring look at her husband, submissively left the room with the others, leaving Captain Morrison alone with the man who had been spotted by the unpleasant scene, and the latter turned defiantly to the little man on the sofa.

"You doubt my claim, then? I tell you I can prove it," he began, in a blustering tone.

"I do not doubt your claim, I believe—I may say I know—that without some strong support of that kind, neither you nor your tutor would have had the pluck to carry through your impudent imposture."

"Imposture! What do you mean? I tell you I am Sir Charles' legitimate son."

"Of which fact you were ignorant until your present more cunning and more intelligent associate, scenting a chance of plunder, went to Ireland to see James Otway, imprisoned on a charge of murder, discovered you"—the other moved at last, changed color—"passed you off upon Massey, the lawyer, as your cousin, and bided his time."

That time came when you escaped from prison. The other James Otway had been lost sight of; Lindley believed he stouly went to England; your way seemed clear. Then came your attempts to murder the man who stood in your way by poison and by a bullet, and your efforts to inflame my mind against him by rousing my jealousy as a husband, and by imputing to him the very crime of which I have called you here to accuse you. I don't know how your venomous wife's half-frightened confidences and the bold appearance of her cousin, James Otway, had not waked suspicion enough in me to send me to Enfield, where I learned from my sister's lips that it was you for whom she was mad enough to leave her husband, that you married in a few weeks of the well-known woman your coarse nature could not appreciate; that, seeing this, and being too proud to confess that she was your wife, she got your name, James Otway, whom she knew as Harry Hammond, to see her off on her journey to Enfield, where she lived by herself until I found her out. On my return from Enfield I went straight to Corby, where, with the aid of getting an explanation from the James Otway whom I had been pursuing for so long, I learned the truth of the matter. I was waiting for my back to the open window in his sitting-room, I was shut behind—indeed, I was in doubt, for James Otway—by you!"

And Captain Morrison turned and looked at Lindley, the face of the unabashed "Dr. Ledbury."

When the cry "Otway," he continued, "brought in Mrs. Corby, and her husband from the kitchen, and James Otway from the field behind the house, through which I had been slowly returning home, I had time to decide upon a plan to clear up the mess which I saw that the death of the innocent James Otway would be a signal for the guilty one to come forward, and his crimes buried in the grave of his namesake. So I persuaded the uninjured James Otway to remain hidden at the farm, and I had time even to play the trick of passing him off living for dead to his adopted wife—in order that her evidence might be unimpaired, and your guiltier accomplice, my trick succeeded perfectly, as I think, Dr. Ledbury, that you will admit. And now I have another matter to discuss with you. Your murder, your lies, your fresh attempts at murder, do not concern me; they concern the detective who has been on your track since you left this house yesterday morning, and who is now waiting outside with a cordon of police to arrest you, and restore you to the seclusion you left so abruptly eight months ago."

"Sir James started up from the chair in which he had defiantly placed himself at the beginning of this speech, and showed his gleaming, white teeth in a savage grin at his accuser, who continued, quietly:

"As I said before, these trifling errors don't concern me. But you are a versatile ruffian. In the interval between escaping from prison and ousting your crime had forfeited, you filled my time in making love to a married woman, and persuading her to elope with you, and consequently the death of her son, his voice shining in spite of him, and your own return to England, you deserted her, and left it to her victim, the man you were trying to make away with, to see her safely to a place of seclusion."

"That is your version of her share in the matter," sneered the other, significantly.

"She had it from my sister's own lips the night before last. James Otway believed her to be your wife, for she was too proud to betray you. Now, I have sworn to avenge my sister's death, and I will not let you escape. This does concern me. If I had met you knowing what I now do, anywhere but under your own roof, I would have shot you dead like a dog; as it is, you are a condemned man; the police are waiting for you to leave this house to arrest you; so I cannot take advantage of you now. But I will show you a way to escape, and you may evade them and get away safely—for the present; for I will track you round the world, and when I next meet you, I will show you no mercy."

"Thank you," said Captain Morrison, so good as to fulfill the first part of your offer at once; and, as for the kind promise to scalp me afterward, why, I'll take my chance of that."

"Go up to the top of the house, and get out by the ladder on to the roof. I will have you brought down and let out as soon as it is safe."

"Perhaps you won't mind paying beforehand for the exciting chase of me you have promised yourself, by lending me a couple of sovereigns to help me to get a fair start?"

He was as impudently cool as ever as he crossed the room toward the door to take the money Captain Morrison held out to him. He put out his left hand to receive it, at the same time that with his right he drew out a revolver, and pointed it at the man who had been spotted by the unpleasant scene, and the latter turned defiantly to the little man on the sofa.

"You doubt my claim, then? I tell you I can prove it," he began, in a blustering tone.

"I do not doubt your claim, I believe—I may say I know—that without some strong support of that kind, neither you nor your tutor would have had the pluck to carry through your impudent imposture."

Presentation to Dr. Austin—List of Graduates—A Londoner's Success.

St. Thomas, June 29.—The closing exercises of this popular institution began June 19 with an eloquent recital by the graduating class, consisting of Miss Minnie McDonald, of Duluth, Miss Dorcas Ferguson, of Strathroy, and Miss Ethelyn Clancy, of Plainville, Mich. This programme and also that of the elocution class, which on the 23rd, showed rare power of interpreting the thought and sentiment of the best literature, was a grace and finish of expression which reflected great credit on the head of the department. The piano recital and music class programmes were of highly classical music, and the graduates, Miss Susan Taylor, of London, Ont., and Miss Mae Smith, of Wyoming, showed themselves most accomplished. The piano recital, which was given Friday evening last, and was very select, its principal features being a recital by Miss Williams, a class record by Miss Edith Ayers, and a class prophecy by Miss Ethelyn Clancy. This programme, but most interesting programme of the exhibit was declared open by Dr. Austin, who proceeded to read a list of art exhibit, which was of a superior character.

The college games and the campus on Saturday afternoon attracted a large crowd of friends and patrons. The games were most eagerly contested, and over twenty valuable prizes were distributed by the students. The reunion programme was given entirely by readings and music, and was enjoyable throughout.

On Sunday, June 28, Rev. J. S. Williamson, D.D., of Mount Forest, preached the Baccalaureate sermon to the graduates. The religious reunion, conducted in the evening by Rev. Dr. Austin, was one of great interest and profit.

Monday evening was devoted to a social time among the students, and after some delightful choruses by the choir, Principal Austin presided, and called to the platform, and a most flattering address was read by J. R. Coyne, M.A., in behalf of the students, faculty, ex-students and executive committee, and the principal was presented with a very valuable and expensive library chair, and Mrs. Austin with a very beautiful day clock and a day clock.

Today the annual convocation, President Austin presiding. On the platform were: Rev. President Austin, B.A., D.D., Rev. Prof. Warner, M.A., Prof. Hyattman, the faculty of the college, graduates, Mr. Waterbury, and J. H. Coyne, M.A., of St. Thomas, and George Jackson, of London, and C. T. Scott, B.A., George F. Saiton, Ph.B., Rev. J. McDonald, B.A., (Toronto), Colin McDougall, (Toronto), of the executive committee, Mr. Drummond (of Knox Church), and J. Morrison (of Strathroy).

Most of the addresses were eulogistic of the work of the school and the part taken therein by the graduates. Rev. Prof. Warner, the prospects of the school are excellent.

Following is the list of graduates: Fine arts, Minnie Williams; music, Susie C. Jackson, Mae Smith; elocution, Dorcas Ferguson, Ethelyn Clancy, and Ethelyn B. Clancy; English literature, Edith Ayers; commercial science, May Mosely, Minnie Kennedy, Harriet P. Taylor, Rose McTavish, Margaret Smith, Lillian Johnson, Dorcas Ferguson, Eva Bell, Amanda Austin.

Fourth A certificates in music: P. Straub, A. Smith, Martha Schmidt, B. Veale, A. Ayer, Nell Taylor.

Fourth B certificates in music: Mary Clark, P. Whitmore, L. E. Anderson, E. Lovell, A. Tuckey, H. Wiley, E. Butcher, M. Eccles, E. Coughell, A. Forder, M. Dill, King, A. Third A certificates in music: E. Graham, D. Clark, E. Diebel, G. Kennedy, M. Varcoe, B. King, M. Mann, M. Spencer.

Third B certificates in music: M. Hayes, M. Mosely, M. Kennedy, Rosamond, E. Manley.

Second A: F. Rodenhurst, A. Dennis, Voice—Second year—Mabel Smith, Ida La Rue, Marcella Reynolds.

Fine Art—Third year: C. Coyne, M. E. Connell, D. Clark, N. B. Jay, and year—P. Whitmore, M. Varcoe, A. Forder, H. M. McDonald, B. King.

Promoted to academy—Mabel Lovell, E. Manley, P. Whitmore, G. Anderson, F. Rodenhurst, First college—B. Rosamond, B. King, E. Forder, M. Varcoe, Second college—E. A. Hartley.

Elocution—Second year: Lettie Brodrecht, Eva Bell, Mabel, Eccles, Annie Forder.

Certificates in typewriting—Mabelle Spencer, Minnie Kennedy, Harriet P. Wiley.

Stenography—First class—Harriet P. Wiley, Second class—Mabelle Spencer, May Mosely.

Bookkeeping—First class—Mabelle Spencer, Minnie Kennedy, Harriet P. Wiley.

The governor-general's medal was awarded to Miss Ethelyn Clancy, of Plainville, Mich., who graduated as M.A., and also in the department of elocution.

Chase's Ointment Cures All Skin Irritations.

Of the many skin diseases, eczema is one of the worst and most common. The one effective remedy so far discovered for it is Dr. Chase's Ointment. It has never been known to fail. Mr. Andrew Aiton, of Harland, N. B., says:

"My little daughter, Grace Ella aged three and a half, was afflicted with eczema for three years. We tried a number of alleged cures and several doctors, but all without effect. Here was indeed a bad case. Her little body was entirely covered with rash. One day our local druggist, Mr. Wm. E. Thistle, recommended me to try Dr. Chase's Ointment. I did so, and four boxes effected a complete cure and saved our child."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is just as effective for piles, salt rheum and sores of all descriptions. For a bad case, dealers and Edmondson, Bates & Co., manufacturers, Toronto; price 60c.

There is nothing to equal Chase's Linseed and Turpentine for severe colds and lung troubles. Large bottles 25 cents.
