BRITISH WEST AFRICA MAY PRODUCE COTTON

Gordon Beattie Gives Interesting Address On Conditions As He Saw Them.

Peanuts and cotton form practically he only exports of the country, said Mr. Beatty. The cotton trade as ye is small, it being hard to induce the natives to cultivate the proper sor of cotton plant. The country has always produced cotton, but it has been of the very worst quality. Research on the part of the British government demonstrated that cotton second only to the very finest Egyptian product could be grown in the country. If a sufficient majority of the natives request it, districts are set aside in which is it illegal to grow any but the superior quality. Gradu ally these areas are being extended and the colony promises to develop into a real factor in the cotton markets of the world.
