dropping my party allegiance. I cannot dance to the old music. I cannot any longer swear by the old cries; and I must confess I have little faith in the old leaders. The leaders whom we have followed so long are able—honest I believe—but hopelessly timid—despairingly conservative. Liberal conservatism is an avowed device to catch liberal votes. Conservative liberalism delays and betrays the cause it professes to promote. It is too slow for the pace of national advancement to-day. Political thought is now, not merely progressive, it is revolutionary; but the liberal convention of the third will give no indication of its character. The convention will merely re-assert the same old party in the same old leaders, but it will take no note of the enormous change which has taken place in political thought and sentiment during the past ten years, In spite of the subservising of others to party tradition and newspaper dictation, our people are beginning to feel and will soon begin to proclaim that they are no longer colonists, but Canadians—not dependents, but treem. But the hold avoyal will tribe the content of the projected starch works.

They have endeavored to stamp us as a secret society organization, and when they did not thus gain the public favor they accused us of hindering them from employing whom they wished. "Pass a resolution," say they, through their foreman, "that we can employ whom we desire; expel the lasters from Cochrane, Cassels & Co's from your union; send us a copy of resolutions passed to this effect and we will give you work." I answered there was no clause in our by-laws that hindered employees from hiring whom they pleased; that I had no report from the men at Cochrane, Cassels & Co's; and that the employers having treated us rather unceremoniously we would not render ourselves amenable to the law; that if they acceded to our former conditions we were willing to work and await justice in our case with patience. We implore our fellow-craft to come to our assistance and ard us materially. The employers have but one aim in view and that is to destroy our union. We are the head of five sister associations in our trade, and they desire to conquer us, knowing well that a body without a head is of little use.
