PROPRIETOR AND PUBLISHER.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 24, 1908.

The ravages of the canker-worm are about over for this season, the grub now leaving the trees to make its nest in the ground. Orchardists are now protecting their trees with tarred paper, to prevent the female moth, which will emerge from the cocoon later and which is wingless, from crawling up the tree to deposit her eggs for another season.

WHAT MIGHT BE.

There is food for thought in the following extract from the San Francisco Star, on the occasion of the recent visit of the United States fleet to that city:
"The $180,000,000 invested in the war ships now in San Francisco harbor would irrigate 6,000,000 acres of arid land and provide homes for 150,000 families, giving to each family fifty acres of land. That amount of money would build a road from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and such a road owned by the people and run for the benefit of the people would squeeze every drop of water out of the railroads of the country.

DIXON—FOSTER.
(Lynn Item.)

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Adoniram J. Foster, 114 Bowler St., was the scene of a pretty wedding, Wednesday evening, when their daughter, Miss Precious Mae Foster, was united in marriage to Leroy L. Wood Dixon. The ceremony was performed by Rev. William W. Bestard, of the Dudley street Baptist Church, Roxbury, an uncle of the groom. To the strains of Lohengrin's wedding march, played by Mrs. Nettie Stavey Hardenbrook, the bridal party took their places in the parlor before a bank of ferns, potted plants and cut flowers. Here they were met by the clergyman who tied the nuptial knot with the double ring service. The bride wore a handsome gown of white satin with yoke of all-over lace and insertion, and veil caught up with white roses. She carried a bridal bouquet of the same flowers. The bridegroom wore a suit of white lace and insertion, and carried a bouquet of pink pinks. The groom was attended by his best man, Joseph Frazier Lewis.

From 8.30 to 10 a reception was tendered the newly married couple, during which an excellent musical program was furnished by the Hardenbrook orchestra of Peabody. The ushers were J. Murray Wilson, Jas. H. Rounding, Joseph M. Foster and Joseph S. Dill. The guest book was in charge of Miss Goldie Esther Brinton, and the gift room by Miss Etta Saville Bent. The punch bowl was in charge of Henningar L. Foster and the servers were Mrs. Lizette M. Dill, Mrs. Addie P. Wilson, Mrs. Maud A. Foster and Miss Ethel M. Clondman. The groom's gift to the bride was a brooch of diamonds and pearls. The bride's gift to the groom was a pearl crescent stick pin. The bride's gift to the bridegroom was a gold brooch set with a diamond. The groom's gift to the best man was a gold stick pin.

The couple were well remembered with many beautiful and useful wedding gifts, among the special ones were a handsome table lamp from the employer of the bride and groom, J. J. Grover Sons; a cut glass water-bottle from the employees of the shipping and turn departments, Mr. Dixon being former in the former room; a clock from the bride's associates; in the stitching room; a picture from friends in the packing room; a picture from the office, and a cut-glass water set from the First M. E. choir.

MILNER AND TARIFF REFORM.

Reciprocal trade among members of the British family, business and sentiment making together for Imperial cohesion, unity and strength—such has been the keynote of several effective addresses on tariff reform recently delivered by Lord Milner. These presentations of the case have commanded much attention, and British newspapers have given much space to them, accompanied in many cases by hearty editorial commendation. In one of these addresses Lord Milner said, in part:

"But now, in conclusion, to get away from these figures—instructive and indispensable as the figures are to the great economic and political objects which we as tariff reformers have at heart. There are two ideals before us—separate and yet akin—and working into one another. I do not say, never will say that tariff reform alone is going to accomplish either. I have no superstitious belief in it. But I do say it is essential to both. One is the building up of the several great states of the empire, including India, as separate units, to the highest state of industrial efficiency, of productive power of which they are individually capable; the other is the drawing together of these units separately built up into an economic and political union, which might be the greatest in the world, the most self-sufficient, and, as a whole, the most unassailable. What is the attitude of the people of any of the great self-governing Dominions? With many local differences there is still one spirit common to them all. We want, they say, to be a real nation, with an all-round development, with varied industries, capable of standing on our feet, economically as well as in all other respects. We will not allow anyone, not even the Mother Country, not even the sister states to cramp or fetter our growth on our own lines. We believe we know what is best for ourselves. Moreover we believe that the stronger and more independent we are the more we shall contribute to the strength of the family of States, the Greater Nation to which we are loyal, to which we still desire to belong. What more natural than that we should try to help the other members of the family and expect them to help us in every way not inconsistent with the separate growth of each member. Everyone for himself first, but everyone next for the family. Let the family all round recognize a duty and an interest in promoting the prosperity of its members. Let us mutually give each other the greatest assistance we can give one another's wants. Let our external policy be far as may be, benefit the other members of the family, and theirs, as far as may be, benefit us rather than ourselves. I must say it seems to me a reasonable and a patriotic proposition. And we in this Old Country have also got to think of ourselves. We have got our own special industries, very great and powerful ones, but beyond that we need of external attack. Against such attack, where they need it, we, too, shall be wise to defend them. We, too, must shape our economic policy with regard to our own requirements, our need of revenue, our need of more and more steady employment for our people, our need of an ample and secure supply of food and raw materials, of which the other parts of the Empire, with increased freedom from us, will be more and more able to become the chief providers. And in so shaping it we shall be able, to do so much more, than we do at present—though we could do so much more tomorrow if we carried out in the field of commercial intercourse this great idea of the family of British nations. We are told that this is commercialized patriotism. But who would pour contempt upon a father and son, or brother and brother, working together in matters of business, as commercialized family affection, as commercialized family affection, not the opposite but the naturalness of a man could in a perfectly straight, legitimate, and open way put business into the hands of a relation, should we think worse of him for doing it, or better of him for putting it into other hands? The whole more than mere business, practical, danger rhetoric, in the conception of the family as applied to the British group of States? If so, then you cannot exclude its influence from any side of practical life, least of all from so important a side as that of commercial relations. There is no doubt that deep down at the roots of this controversy lies the antithesis between the wider national and the cosmopolitan view. I do not for a moment say that many of those who are opposed to us are not as good patriots in sentiment as good Imperialists, as we are. Many of them are not. But many of them are. You could not have a better patriot than Lord Cromer. But I do say that ours is the more logical, the more consistent position, that they are unfortunate in being wedded to a theory which cuts them off from one of the most powerful movements making for the realization of the ideas which they and we have in common."

SACQUE AND CASH FOUNDRY. CATERPILLARS STOP TRAIN IN NEW BRUNSWICK. Mrs. J. F. Outhit and Miss Outhit left on the Plant Liger Halifax Thursday for Boston, and late in the afternoon a sacque was aloft in the harbor by a boatman. In the pocket he found $36 in cash and Miss Outhit's ticket for Boston. He immediately took it to the Plant office and Mr. Outhit was communicated with and identified the sacque as Miss Outhit's. He rewarded the finder and forwarded the sacque and contents of the pockets by express to Miss Outhit at Boston as well as telegraphed her of the finding of the sacque. It is thought the sacque had been laid on the rail when the steamer left the wharf and was caught by the wind and blown overboard, not being missed perhaps for some time afterwards.

Rifle Association Notes

The annual competitions of the Annapolis County Rifle Association are to be held Friday and Saturday of this week on the range at Nicotax. Preparations are being made by the ladies at Nicotax to entertain the visitors on Saturday, and the entrance fee has been reduced very much with a view to attract new shots and "one match" has been arranged at 200, 500 and 600 yards, with a prize for every competitor. On Friday of next week, the provincial match for the "Klondike Cup" will be shot on the range at Kentville. The Bridgetown Club sent a team last year which won second place, but, owing to the removal and absence of some of the best shots, it will not be able to furnish a team this year, but the 6th will send a team and it is expected now that a strong team will be made up.
