

LANCASTER, ONT. CARRIED BY "FRUIT-A-TIVES"

These Wonderful Fruit Juice Tablets
Are Winning Friends on Every Side.

LANCASTER, ONT., Sept 16, 1908

I was a martyr for many years to that distressing complaint, chronic Constipation. I tried many kinds of pills and medicines without benefit and consulted physicians, but nothing did me any real good. Then I began to take "Fruit-a-tives," and these wonderful little fruit tablets entirely cured me.

At first, I took five tablets a day, but now I take only one tablet every two days. I am now entirely well, and thanks to "Fruit-a-tives," I give you permission to publish this testimonial.

(Madame) Zephoria Bonaville.
This is only one more link in the chain of proof that "Fruit-a-tives" never fail to cure Constipation or non-action of the bowels. See a box, or 6 for $2.50, or trial box 50c. At dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

HELPS THE POOR SAVE MONEY.

Through the efforts of the Rev. Caroline Bartlett Crane 400 small bank accounts are in active operation in the Savings Bank of Kalamazoo. The savings collector, who is a paid trained worker, collected in the first eighteen months of her service $14,452.41, which would otherwise have melted away in foolish expenditure. Gilt-framed crayon portraits on the walls, onyx clocks on the mantels when the household furnishings are sadly out of repair and the children's shoes out at the toes, are in many of the homes mute memorials of where some of the money used to go. Now the savings collector, who makes weekly rounds, gets there before the agent with a glittering instalment-plan bauble. She receives any amount from five cents upward, enters it on the owner's bank book, and carries it to the bank for deposit.

"My husband says to me, 'Ain't you ashamed to give out so little to a bank?' declared one woman, who handed over thirty-five cents, 'but I says, 'No, I ain't, 'cause the bank lady says, 'It's all right.'"

It is this encouragement that is helping many a family to save. They never did it on their own initiative, because they couldn't brave the splendor of a mahogany desk and a brass-framed window with their meagre mite. Now, it is saved penny by penny during the week, and when the bank lady comes it is brought proudly out from the cracked teacup in the china cupboard and from the old black stocking in the lower machine drawer. One family is saving to buy a home. One woman who sews for a living now counts seventy dollars in the fund she is laying by with which to send her daughter through college. The largest of the accounts is not over two hundred dollars. They are drawn on in time of need. But that is precisely what they are for. With these funds have been bought hundreds of bushels of potatoes and scores of tons of coal, some of which the Charities Organization would otherwise have been obliged to supply.

It was out of an investigation of the chattel mortgage evil that the savings collection work developed. Mabel Potter Daggett in The Delinquent for June.

There is no peace so tranquil and glad as that which follows forgetfulness of self in the requirements of another.

MORE DEADLY THAN CANCER.

It is said on high authority, that cancer causes only 30 deaths in every thousand deaths, while Indigestion causes, directly or indirectly, fully one-half of the deaths in this country. Indigestion starves the body, weakens the liver, poisons the blood and in short, ruins the life-power and vigor in its veins. You need not fear Indigestion, if you take after meals a dose of the famous digestive tonic, Mother's Syrup. It leads the wholish from herbs, and corrects the disordered stomach as no other medicine can do. Mrs. Ralph Stephenson, of P.O. Huron County, Ont., writes on Jan. 23, 1909, saying: "We have used Mother's Syrup for years and years and always keep it in the house. As a stomach medicine we recommend it very highly. It always keeps us healthy and well. Price 60c per bottle. Sold everywhere. A. J. White & Co., Ltd., Montreal.

Press Opinion on the Georgian Bay Canal

(Extracts from letter to Toronto Globe, May 22nd, 1909.)

"The Georgian Bay Canal would result in such a reduction of inland rates to the ocean port as to cut down the freight rates on grain to one-third of the present rate. This enormous saving in freights would largely go into the pockets of the western farmers, with a corresponding benefit on everything they import. Besides, the construction of the Georgian Bay Canal would open up the immense region of country of the northern part of Ontario and Quebec, a country that so badly requires such cheap transportation, and transportation that can be given in no other way. The utilizing of the large rivers would furnish an enormous amount of waterpower that would soon induce important industries to locate themselves along the entire length of the Canal, which would be of immense benefit to the whole country.

"Many other benefits would follow the building of this great Canadian waterway, such as the passage of ocean steamers to the head of the Great Lakes and vice versa, with full cargoes to and from Europe, and the likelihood of an immense trade springing up between the great west and the Maritime Provinces. It would have the very desirable effect of uniting by the best of all ties, community interest, the east with the west of Canada, and so keep the whole of Canada's interior trade for Canada, instead of allowing it to go to the United States, as the building of the new Welland would. It is a route which it would be a disgrace to Canada not to make use of in face of all the immense inducements for new and profitable business that such a canal will open up. The opening of this canal will develop this northland into one of the richest possessions of the country, and attract thousands of investors, to which may also be added the immense business that should arise with the Hudson's Bay, to which large and navigable rivers run from near the sources of the Ottawa river through a country able to sustain from all reports millions of people, but now valueless for want of such transportation as the Georgian Bay Canal would give. Against these immense possibilities the building of the Welland Canal has nothing to offer, and instead has great possibilities of a dangerous loss of trade to and complications with the United States."

AMERICAN OPINIONS.

"From an engineering point of view disregarding for the moment political boundaries, there can be no doubt that the Ottawa route is by far the best for a deep waterway from the upper Lakes to the sea. The route is not a canal. There are only short stretches of excavated channel (amounting to 32 miles in all), and the rest is open lake and river navigation. Except for the time required to pass through the locks, a vessel could make nearly as good time on this route from Chicago to Montreal as from Chicago to Buffalo. Making allowance for delays at locks, it is found that a vessel will take only about 14 hours more for the voyage to Montreal than for the voyage to Buffalo. Thus, if grain is shipped from Chicago or Duluth to Buffalo at 1 1/2 cents per bushel, it is evident that it can be taken to Montreal through this waterway for not more than 1 1/2 cents. Conservative estimates of the traffic which such a route could command show that it should earn sufficient on its cost from the start, with enormous profits to pay the interest possibilities of increased traffic in the future, in view of the coming development of the great Canadian Northwest."—Engineering News, New York.

"Canada has gone ahead without having the market of the United States in which to sell her products and to that extent has become more competitive in the world's markets."

"It may be a great many years yet before the boast of the Canadian statesman is realized that the Dominion can feed Great Britain; but the great number of steamers now plying from the St. Lawrence with cargoes of grain and cattle bear ample testimony to the fact that the tendency of the competition is becoming every year more serious. That the Dominion is doing everything possible to do this business is likewise evident by the recent governmental guarantee of construction for the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad, another band of trans-continental steel to parallel the Canadian Pacific, as also by the canal construction which has already diverted to Montreal considerable in the export line which otherwise would have come to New York, and when the Georgian Bay Canal construction is completed will do even more toward that end."—Syren, New York.

CAMP SUSSEX VISITED BY A TERRIFIC HAIL STORM.

Sussex, N. B., July 5.—Camp Sussex was taken unawares this afternoon by one of the fiercest storms, while it lasted, that has been experienced in these parts for some time. During the forenoon finer weather could not have been desired, but shortly after dinner the sky became overclouded. The infantry, with the exception of the 74th Regiment, did not go on parade, as usual at 2 o'clock, as there was to be a turnout later in the afternoon.

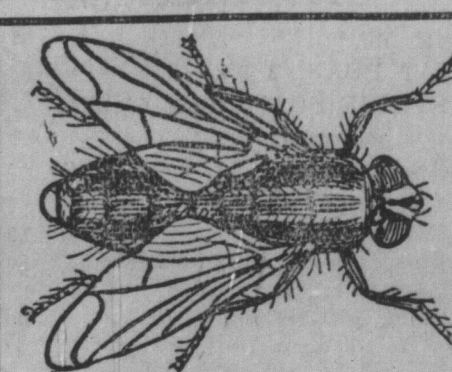

The 74th, with its band at its head, paraded to the rifle range for target shooting about 2 o'clock in full strength. They had not proceeded far, however, before they were overtaken by a very heavy shower, which caused them to seek shelter. As the other two regiments did not parade at 2 o'clock the signallers were left in undisputed possession of the field and commenced their work immediately, dividing into sections of two and three for station practice.

Suddenly the skies became dark, a few sprinkling drops of rain made their way earthwards and those who were at liberty ran for shelter. The signallers at their respective depots valiantly remained at their posts until they received the command "C. I." which means "vacate your stations and come in." And those who were farthest away from camp were pretty well drenched before they managed to "come in."

In shorter time and space than are required for the telling the raindrops were transformed into hailstones, the smallest of which were the size of peas and the average about an inch in diameter. Soon the ground became strewn with hail, and though the sun came out about 3 o'clock and shone brightly until 5, some of the hailstones were seen in fairly large quantities at 6 o'clock on the grounds. About 5.30 o'clock this evening rain began falling once more, but after a few showers a pretty rainbow appeared, which was welcomed all along the line.

The storm made things very disagreeable, a good many of the tents, which had been brail up for ventilation purposes, being flooded. Some of the horses in the 8th Hussars and Army Service Corps became frightened at the terrific downfall and a number of them stampeded. Blankets had to be placed over the heads of many of them to keep them quiet.

A man once complained to his spiritual adviser of his habit of exaggeration, which he found it impossible to overcome. His friend said: "When next you find yourself guilty of anything approaching falsehood, go back to the one deceived and explain your misrepresentation and apologize. You will soon get over the habit then." It proved a sharp but a sure cure. Accuracy in statement led to truthfulness in nature.

REFUSE UNSATISFACTORY IMITATIONS

Minding One's Own Business

A good start indeed, on the road to success has he employee who has learned the art of being a "know nothing." Though this statement sounds absurd, there is truth in it. One of the first principles of a successful employee is to keep his mouth shut concerning his employer's business, when with other men employed in a similar capacity in other firms the natural tendency of the crowd is to talk "shop."

A certain amount of this is, of course, all right, and in many instances mutually beneficial. But the trouble is to know when to draw the line. Though an employee of a big business concern or of a small one for that matter is not entrusted with all, or perhaps even any, of the important secrets of the firm, there are many valuable points which he is in a position to pick up here and there, simply because he is in their employ. It may be merely some method that his firm has adopted in some branch of its business, that he tells his friend about—with pride, perhaps, or with condemnation. Those friends may be perfectly good friends and sincere, but if they are "alive" the chances are that they will straightway mention the matter to their own employers. It is foolhardy indeed to tell outsiders of the inner workings of one's firm and expect them, without any incentive to keep the matter secret, to FOI, yourself, are unable to keep your own mouth shut about it.

Young men are prone to tell each other of the bridging down of expenses and to an dilain of the various "tight-wadly" economies of their employers. Many cases these small economies, practiced by every firm that succeeds, are changed by gossip from mole hills of practical business acumen into mountains of doubtful credit, questionable financial standing and implied failure.

Sooner or later, the fact that an employee is telling business secrets, however unimportant they may be, to outsiders is bound to reach the ears of the firm. However capable the employee may be, no employer is going to stand for anything of that sort. In self-defence, the employee must be discharged. A young man, starting out in the business world, once went to an older man who had been pre-eminently successful in the same line, and asked for advice.

The older man paused a minute and looked at the young boy impressively. "I've got one thing to say to you, young man," he said, "and that is—be a 'kn.'"

The young man was astounded, and asked the older man he really meant it.

The old fellow, a trifle irascible, as old men are wont to be—especially if they have been successful themselves—refused to explain further, and told the young fellow to think over what he had said and its meaning would in time be clear to him.

The young man had been only a few weeks in the business, but had managed to let every other employee understand that the junior partner was an especial friend of his father and had placed him there. Moreover, he entertained the other employees at lunch each day with anecdotes he had heard in his own home concerning the friendships, social entertainments etc., of the junior member of the firm. He constituted himself a sort of ready-reference manual of the doings of the junior partner outside of the office.

In a surprisingly short time his own father called the young man aside and accused him of telling things that did not concern him, stating that his friend, the junior partner, had complained to him about it. In conclusion the boy's father advised—"be a know-nothing, my son, and," he added, more explicitly, "by that I mean keep your mouth shut with your fellow employees about the firm and its business, and know absolutely nothing that is going on in the office, nor any of the office politics, except the requirements of your own individual work."

THE CONFESSIONS OF A SECOND WIFE.

Since this is a confession, it may as well be a frank and truthful one. I am not jealous of my husband's first wife—at least I hope I am not. But when he looks depressed or when I see that he is not as happy as I would like him to be, I am conscious of an uncomfortable doubt. I have tried to bring my sense of humor to bear upon this pain, too, and sometimes I have succeeded fairly well—sometimes I have failed dismally. A trying trick that my dear husband minded reverie or abstraction; and he has is that of sinking into an absent-mindedness so far forgets himself as to call me "Mary" instead of "Sarah." Once when he had been particularly forgetful and dreamy he did this three times in one evening. At last my resentment and appreciation of the ridiculous sprang to arms. With the fourth "Mary" I answered sweetly:

"In heaven, dear! Won't I do?" I had heard of another wife who had done this, and it had sounded funny to me when I heard the story; but when I uttered the unseemly and unrefined speech I was overcome with shame, my anger fled, and, bursting into tears, I begged my husband's pardon. I knew that I had hurt him, and I told him so.

"I am hurt," he said; "I had no idea that the memory of my poor girl, or that my thought of her, distressed you. Since it does, I shall be more careful in the future, my dear wife, and try not to talk of her."—Success Magazine.
