turalist," which are literary in the tenderest sense, her work has been useful more than ornamental. Hence, if we would know the worker we must see her—see her in her happy moods, when the lustre of her eyes makes easy the reading of her thoughts, and the undisturbed flow of her conversation holds the interest of the listener.

Her earlier writings, published in England, brought her recompense both in pocket and reputation. There she has a reputation like that of A.L.O.E. in this country.

She is not valued in ~~Canada~~ Canada as she should be. Her ideal is too high and her work too consistent for that. The two-and-two-are-four fashion of the day has
