To the Congregations of the Church of England, in Canada, assembling in Trinity Church, Cornwall, and in Dixon's Church, Moulinette.

My dear Friends; Your kind address found me most happily engaged in the duties of an English Curacy. And I need hardly tell you how grateful I felt, towards the members of my late flock, for their affectionate remembrance, and warm acknowledgment, of my poor services amongst them. You have indeed much cause for "thankfulness" to Almighty God, for having blest you with such a distinguished succession of Pastors as my venerated predecessors were with when I am not markly to be a sort were with when I am not markly to be a sort were with when I am not markly to be a sort were with when I am not markly to be a sort were with when I am not markly to be a sort were with the sort was the sors were, with whom I am not worthy to be named.— But suffer me affectionately to remind you, that in proportion to the high privileges which you have enjoyed, is the solemn responsibility which rests upon you to excel in all that is "lovely and of good report." For "to whom much has been given, of him will much also be

With respect to the course of instruction, pursued by myself, to which you refer so kindly in your address, I have only to remark that it was adopted after much serious reflection, after consultation with some of the most experienced and sober-minded members of the congregations and with the averages approval of the Bishop. And tions, and with the express approval of the Bishop. And if my method of teaching has proved beneficial and edifying to the flock which was entrusted to my care, let it attach them firmly to the Church, when I tell them, that I simply endeavoured fully to carry out the course of inon which she has prescribed, for her children, in the Book of Common Prayer.

There is much to encourage us in the prospects of the Church, both at home, and in Canada. But there is much also to cause us alarm. In these days therefore it behoves a Churchman to be decided: not to be afraid of avowing the distinctive principles of the Church. And I know, by daily experience, that it is quite possible to be consistent with our Church principles, and yet to live in perfect charity with those who separate themselves from us.

I rejoice to think that the Bishop's fatherly interest, in

I rejoice to think that the Bishop's namely made over a scene of his early ministerial labours, has placed over all the Churches." May you one, whose "praise is in all the Churches." May his valuable life be long spared, to bless you with his labours. Rest assured that my interest in the affairs of your village and country will terminate only with my life. Nor shall I ever cease to supplicate the blessing of Almighty God upon the Churches in Cornwall and Moulinette. Accept my dear friends, my most grateful remembrances and best thanks for all the kindness and bearance which you showed towards myself and my family during my residence amongst you, and believe me to remain,

Very faithfully your's,

It is then intended that she shall make one or two trial trips, after which she will proceed to London.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON AN ETON BOY .- On Saturday last the Duke of Wellington, whilst on a visit to Her Majesty at Windsor Castle, walked to Eton College, accompanied by the Duke of Rutland, for the express purpose of inspecting the room in the house of his "dame" which the gallant duke occupied when an Eton boy. The house, known as the Manorhouse, is now in the occupation of the Rev. Mr. Bulston, one of the masters of the College, and the "Duke's room" is occupied by an Etonian, the son of Mr. Hankey, the banker. The noble duke remained in the room some time, contemplating the scenes of his Eton days, and was much gratified in recognizing and pointing out to his companion several relics which were familiar to his Grace's recollection, although it is 65 years since he occupied this apartment.

THE SCOTT MONUMENT .- On Saturday last, the topmost stone—or, as it is technically called, the final,—was placed on this monument, exhibiting, in its full proportions, and in all the richness of its light and elegant Gothic tracery, a structure which, for beauty of design and imposing effect, is admittedly unsurpassed, if even equalled, by any similar commemorative or ornamental building in Europe. The ceremony, as it may be called, took place about a quarter to one o'clock,—the uppermost stone (a finely carved shaft, in unison with the other parts of the structure) being placed by the hands of Mr. Donaldson (Albion Cloth Co.), Grand Master of the Celtic Lodge, who we understand, had incurred an engagement with the late la-mented architect of the structure to perform this duty. Several ther members of the Celtic Lodge were present, the silver mallet belonging to that body being used on the occasion, and connected with the stone, in course of elevation, by means af a tartan silk riband. The act of placing the stone was celebrated by three cheers from all the parties who witnessed it, including the workmen and many of the passers by in Princess Street. The Union Jack was immediately after hoisted on the summit, where

I here feel myself bound to state, in the most unqualified terms, that the thanks of all are due to the Master and Marron of the boarding-house, (Mr. and Mrs. Cosens,) for their unceasing and personal attention to the invalids. Each boy must have felt, from the first moment to the last, that the boarding-house was to him, all through his illness, a home, second only to the paternal roof.

Of the re-opening of the College due notice will be given in which will be found to be of the best quality and at unusually
