

Th

To the average person, and - mirabile dictu -, most of all to the business man, they present themselves first and foremost as the necessary poor, desirable objects of charity and compassion. In no other way can we possibly account for the fact that they will not give their serious attention to social and economic problems, which produce these parasites, who are costing the public and private purse of Canada thirty to fifty million dollars a year for their keep in Gaols, Hospitals, Asylums, and poor relief.

Right well did Rabbi Wise say to us in 1909 "You social workers, if you merely use the surplus wealth of the rich to hide the evidences of social maladjustment, then you are to be cursed, and not to be blessed.
