Germany seems, entirely to have miscalculated the possibilities of a rush campaign in Belgium. The German belief has clearly been that no opposition, or only what would be negligible, would be met. Instead of that, gallant little Belgium has succeeded in holding the military Colossus, and a very short time longer will enable the French and British support to rally to the aid of the valiant Flemings and Walloons. Britain will have one or two army corps at Ostend perhaps today, if they are not already there, under the war office direction of the competent Kitchener. This would mean that the Germans, instead of having a neutral zone in Belgium, which respect for their solemn treaty obligations would have given them, are now compelled to fight a desperate campaign to clear their flank and protect their rear, as well as guard themselves from being cut off their base on this northern line attack. The breach of faith on the part of Germany, in fact, will probably change their whole plan of campaign, and instead of marching on Paris, the Germans may have to concentrate all their forces on the northern line of offence to save the kaiser's campaign from the going to pieces in the first ten days. as succeeded in holding the military Colossus, will enable the French and British support to the Grand Banks, for just such prizes.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—The naval experts of The Times says:
"The public must not expect decisive action immediately, since in all circumstances Admiral von Tirpitz may decide the time has not yet arrived for the German fleet to challenge to a trial of strength.

"Unless the teachers of modern naval strategy are mistaken, it should be the object of Germany to begin by a succession of attempts to reduce the great British preponderance in material strength. What we have been led to expect under such conditions is a kind of preliminary warfare between torpedo craft and similar auxiliaries on both sides.

"On the other hand, it is equally possible that two causes—the pressure of public opinion in Germany and the natural desire of a young navy to prove itself—may have their effect when they begin to feel the effect of maritime strangulation. The German people will surely want, some use to be made of their ships. These causes may lead to an earlier appearance of the German fleet in the North Sea than has been predicted by strategical experts.
