

fort of La Barra—Expedition thence to Gibraltar.—Panic of the Free-booters—Olonois' speech to them, and its effect.—Fresh attack—Terrible engagements at, and capture of Gibraltar—Cruelties of the Free-booters there—They burn the city, but afterwards extinguish the fire—Ransom paid—Return to Maracaibo—Plunder of the churches—Ransom paid for them.—Voyage to the island of Avache—Division of the Booty.—New expedition of Olonois—Descents and plunder in the bay of Honduras.—The city of San-Pedro attacked, and carried by assault.—Cruises of the Free-booters near the peninsula of Yucatan.—Separation of Van Vin, one of their commanders, from the main body.—Famine experienced by the Free-booters under Olonois—His shipwreck—Builds a new bark, and departs for the River St. John.—Unfortunate battle between the Free-booters and the combined Spaniards and Indians—Deploable end of Olonois and all his men Page 54.

CHAP. VI.

The Free-booters propose to attack Vera Cruz.—portraits of their three commanders, Van Horn, Grammont, and Laurent de Gratt.—Van Horn, a native of the Netherlands—Progress of his piracies—Is taken prisoner, and saves himself by his extraordinary presence of mind.—Takes two Spanish galleons, and goes over to the Free-booters.—Adventures of Grammont, a French gentleman, previously to his becoming a Free-booter.—Laurent de Gratt, the terror of the Spaniards by his boldness and successes—Defends himself with a small vessel against two Spanish men of war, and beats them off.—Aversion, and subsequent consent of the Pirates to the expedition against Vera Cruz, which they attack and carry, together with its forts—Immense booty—A ransom demanded for the prisoners and preservation