

JUDGE WIGHTMAN, in charging the grand jury at the Yorkshire assizes, on the 12th July, 1849, said:—"A slight examination into the cases would show that Intemperance was the chief source of nearly all of them. So long as the masses of the people could not enjoy a holiday, without frequenting the public-house, and so long as they could not find any higher source of amusement than taking large quantities of intoxicating drinks—so long, I am afraid, there will be no abatement of crime. There was, therefore, great credit due to those societies who sought to benefit mankind by lessening the extent of intemperance."

Mr. Sheriff BELL, of Glasgow, says:—"It is established by every day's experience, that intemperance is a great cause of crime."
