The cablegrams of this morning make it known that certain British subjects who have old claims against several of the Southern States in connection with the repudiated securities, have started a new campaign in order to recover their money. Interest charges accumulate at a astonishing pace, and, leaving the principal out of the question for the moment, unpaid interest dating back to the late sixties would today constitute an amazing total.

In the British House of Commons yesterday an M. P. asked Sir Austen Chamberlain whether or not diplomatic action had been taken on behalf of shame.

Germany will call for another deal, impossibility, extremity, and all the other devices which deal the other devices which the Teutonic mind, particularly in defeat, is capable of originating.
