"Good! I should think she was good! She is not like some prima donnas I have danced with. People talk about ballet girls—with a shrug. 'I could tell them something about prima donnas if I would, but I'm not a gossip. I have enough to do to look after my own affairs, without troubling myself about other people. If you come to know us you will find that we are not as black as we are painted. Some of the hardest working and best women I have ever known have been ballet dancers. Because some one has given us a bad name we are the target for all the simple headed folk and half headed nicks in the country; but those wicked men find themselves mistaken sometimes, and learn that a ballet dancer can take care of herself and that she has others to take care of her. You should have heard my father talk how he thrashed Lord Bellflower on the stage at Covent Garden one night for shaming any member under the chin. My mother was a dancer—one of the most famous in the pantomime, though you would think so from her name, and very beautiful. Old Bellflower thought you would think so from her name, and very beautiful. Old Bellflower thought you would think so from her name, and very beautiful.

"I don't believe you are that sort of a man," said Leon. "If I did, I would not have stood here talking to you, but there is something about you that tells me that you are a honest young fellow and have not been in the city long enough to be spoiled by its wicked ways. All there is my eye."
