"It seems incredible," gasps Jack—the power of the police has appeared so tremendous to him that he cannot conceive of any men defying their utmost endeavours, and working such a game even in the heart of the French capital.

"Nevertheless it is true. Only lately close to his head, rings out its silvery." "Nevertheless it is true. Only lately close to his head, rings out its silvery cation with the man who will arrange this?" he cries. "Immediately. You will find him in the room that door leads to. Tell him just what you want done, and leave the money in his hands to pay his men for their trouble. As for myself, you understand I am to know nothing about the matter. Monsieur Duprez about the matter. "A thousand thanks—I will never erget your kindness," murniurs the en think otherwise. But I admire a ave man alkays," replies the other.

Jack grasps the idea instantly, and the look on his face shows his pleas-

Sack speaks modestly of his own share in these events—he never could be a boaster, and is apt to make the description of a scene too tame because of his extreme diffidence.

Rapidly he sketched his advent in Madrid, the meeting with Mercedes, and the bull-fight. Then comes the little affair in the Museo del Prado. a mention of Avis, and the fact that she is the sister of his friend Aleck, in captivity among the Turks. As for the little affair beyond Logrono—I have had a full account of it from a secret agent who was in the next compartment to yours, and I am proud to know the man who performed such prodigies of valour during that night."

Jack adds—"the inventive powers of the human brane."

He proceeds to tell Monsieur Duprez about the secret clique that has long baffled the police of Paris, and the other listens quietly, just as if he has not lain awake many a night endeavouring to concect ways and means of discovering where this gang held forth.

"This way, please-we will not disturb Monsieur le Prefect again-he i probably busy," and the sub-lieuten ant orens a door, shows Jack a flight he looks up at the sombre houses as pleted his packing, his next move is to to let him know what the game is, and in turn he communicates it to the ladies, who have the room adjoining his, with a door between, Meanwhile Doctor Jack goes below and hires a vehicle to take them all to the station in good time for the Then he waits around until Larry appears, of course inquisitive concern-ing the reason of this unexpected move, for when they separated on the preceding night there was nothing limented by the dude on his fore-hought—he does not even smile while. Carry speaks, although chuckling in-eardly at the queer conceit. Then the ladies appear, and Jack is Doctor Jack comprehends exactly what this is intended to convey—he salutes the prefect, and moves toward iazzled by the bright smile of Avis Merton. stray, or that Abdallah Pasha can be anywhere than in the net.

They go in to breakfast, which can be gotten at almost any hour. Over the table they dally nearly an hour, since time must elapse ere they can go to the station. Jack does not fail to note how well Avis graces the end to note how well Avis graces the end of the table, and handles the coffee urn with such skill that he pictures to himself—poor fellow, it shows how bacly he is caught at last—that same graceful figure reated at the table in an establishment cwned by a certain Jack Evans, called a doctor by his friends because he are dead of the same poor to be a second of the same poor to be a se friends because he graduated as such and practised in the hospitals of Gernany. Somehow, the thought of such possible happiness in the future makes him smile, and she, noticing his glance, turns rosy red, just as though she imagines he is regarding guilty secrets in her face. At length breakfast ends—it is after eight and the carriage awaits then at the door. Jack has given ordersthe luggage is already down, so that all they have to do is to put on the outside wraps and leave the hotel. Avis has become grave-she seldom smiles now, for there is a weight upon her mind. In leaving gay Paris she remembers the danger that lies ahead their mission must occupy all thought now to the exclusion of everything The ride to the station is almost a slient one—outside the rain patters down—then the sun breaks out, to be followed by another shower—it is just such an April weather day as we are accustomed to here, and yet the winter LEE STREET, - - PROPRIETOR has hardly flown.

It is early yet—Doctor Jack has come long before the scheduled time for the train to leave in order to ascertain the truth about the Pasha. He walks up and down the platform smoking—Avis emembers the scene in Madrid, where he did exactly the same thing, and hopes they will not have the same trouble en route that came to them in cover anything of the party for whom he looks—the Parha has not turned up. Nearer comes the time for starting, and still there are no signs of the No wonder Avis' eyes follow him as he walks up and down the platform There is nothing of false pride in his manner, no strut such as a vain man might show, but for all he has a firm nianly carriage, that indicates self re-liance and independence. She is proud of him, and exceedingly glad to remember that he is her friend—that he has devoted himself to her cause. She has such confidence in Doctor Jack that it seems impossible any enterprise can fail which he backs with his indomitable will power. The man who conquered the black tore and defeated the plots of the scheming Carlists, must surely be a master in the game now before them, and will discover some means whereby Aleck may be rescued from his awful posi-

British, and Canadian Makes, the disguised Mercedes approach him. Will she still follow, or is the game to be dropped at Peris? Unconsciousview, but she is not looking for the same party as Jack—he seeks the red fez and bronzed face of the Turk, while Avis is endeavouring to disc she is jealous of Jack-she believe every word he has told her with regard to Mercedes, and yet somehow Avis feels that the Spanish woman will feel better satisfied-as though h really belonged to her. As it is, Avis is in a continual rervous state lest something should occur to prevent his go ing with them—a number of things seem to flash into her mind—a tele-gram may be handed him requiring his attention on some grave business matter, or perhaps the crafty Pasha may prefer a charge against him, and the police arrest the American just be fore the train moves out. These things may seem foolish, but they are one and all within the range of possibility, and in her present frame of mind Avis can invest each with an air of truth. So she holds her watch in her hand and casts many an anxious look upon it. Evidently Jack is preoccupied with his thoughts, for he passes the window a number of times without looking up
