THE OLD BARN'S TENANTRY.

BY B. F. TAYLOR.

The rooster stalks on the manger's ledge,
He has a tail like a scimetar's edge;

A marshal's plume on his afghan neck,
An admiral's stride on his quarter deck,

He rules the roost and he walks the bay
With a dreadful cold and a Turkish way,

Two broadsides fires with his rapid wings—
This sultan proud, of a line of kings,—

One gutteral laugh, four blasts of horn,
Five rusty syllables rouse the morn!

The Saxon lambs in their woolen tabs
Are playing school with their a, b, abs;

A, e! I, o! All the cattle spell
Till they make the blatant vowels tell,

And a half-laugh whinny fills the stalls
When down in the rack the clover falls.

A dove is waltzing around his mate
Two chevrons black on his wings of slate,

And showing off with a wooing note
The satin shine of his golden throat—

It is Ovid's "Art of Love" re-told
In a binding fine of blue and gold!

Ah! the buxom girls that helped the boys,
The nobler Helens of humbler Troys—

As they stripped the husks with rustling fold
From eight-rowed corn as yellow as gold,

By the candle-light in pumpkin bowls,
And the gleams that showed fantastic holes

In the quaint old lantern's tattooed tin,
From the hermit glim set up within;

By the rarer light in the girlish eyes
As dark as wells, or as clear as skies.

I hear the laugh when the ear is red,
I see the blush with the forfeit paid,

The cedar cakes with the ancient twist,
The cider cup that the girls have kissed,

And I see the fiddler through the dusk
As he twangs the ghost of "Money Musk!"

The boys and girls in a double row
Wait face to face till the magic bow

Shall whip the tune from the violin,
And the merry pulse of the feet begin.

—Scribner's for September.

NOTES AND NEWS.

UNITED STATES.

It is said that young gallants who seemed deep in love with brown tresses last year at Cape May now breathe gentle words to chignons of another color. This doesn't indicate fickleness so much as activity in the hair trade.

The New York Commercial says: A hotel clerk at Rye Beach was hit last week by a bullet from a pistol, accidentally discharged by a guest. But stop—don't exult; it didn't hurt him; it only hit him on the cheek, and then fell flattened on the floor.

The New York Sunday Times wickedly says:—Woodhull and Claflin have sailed for Europe. We hope they will have a safe passage, but then if Providence should see fit to order otherwise we would feel it a duty to bear the affliction with Christian resignation.

Scribner's for September contains an unusual number of stories. The most striking of all is Bret Harte's amusing sketch of "Wan Lee, the Pagan." Then there are stories, continued or complete, by Jules Verne, Miss Trafton, James T. McKay, Constance Fenimore Woolson, Harriet Prescott Spofford, and Miss Hopkins, author of "Miss Marigold's Thanksgiving." Mrs. Davis describes "The Peeper-Pot Woman," Mr. Burroughs writes charmingly about "Mellow England," Dr. Crosby, of this city, brightly about "Gastric Literature," and M. S. S. says something about umbrellas. Mr. King's "Great South" paper deals with Alabama and Mississippi. Mr. Locher relates a striking Eastern incident, "A Malay Sailor Running a Muck," and Mr. Richardson tells about the new Normal College in New York. The poetry is by Benjamin F. Taylor (handsomely illustrated), Nora Perry, Samuel W. Duffield and J. V. C. Dr. Holland's Topics are "Literary Style," "The Average Prayer Meeting," and "American Incivility." The Old Cabinet has to do with "Knight Errantry," and "Story Making." Social custom, literature, science, anecdotes and fun are represented in the other regular departments.

GENERAL.

The Queen's Prize at Wimbledon was won by a man from Stockton-on-Tees. That town took its triumph very quietly; it merely went mad.

The Pope says the Church is to be speedily restored to her former power and dignity. If not prophecy, this is at least Vaticanation.—London Figaro.

Complete returns from the election in the Department of Calvados for a vacancy in the French Assembly show that M. Delaunay, Bonapartist, received 40,794 votes, and M. Aubert, Republican, 27,272.

The existing depression in railway business lends interest to the fact that the railway traffic of the United Kingdom has exactly doubled since 1860, and that the proportion of net receipts to paid up capital has increased from 4.19 to 4.59.

A wealthy English gentleman has taken to wife a beautiful Norwegian gipsy, whom he has educated for that fate. It is supposed that he is insane or in love; if the latter, we congratulate him on his approaching convalescence.

Baron Rothschild writes to the papers that he takes no notice of letters from persons who threaten to kill him if he doesn't give them money. His mind is occupied with plans to increase his fortune and on cheap practical projects for rebuilding Jerusalem.

Charles Dickens, in presenting a set of his books to the late poet, George P. Morris, inscribed them, on the fly-leaf of one volume, to "George Morris." When the "error" was pointed ont to him, he said it was intentional: he thought one given name enough for anybody.

French ladies are, it seems, determined to rival their English and American sisters in quest of woman's rights. One of them, M'dlle. Andreline Doumerque, has stormed the Montpelier Apothecaries' Hall, winning honorable admission after a searching examination, her diploma of reception into the faculty being marked "satisfactory."

Murdering an Abandoned Relative.

A shocking murder case has recently been agitating St. Louis, the investigation of which has led to some sad revelations. A few evenings since a farmer living a short distance from the city heard pistol-shots fired in his orchard, and on going thither he was horrified to find the body of a woman lying under a tree, her hair and face covered with blood. Her eyes were terribly swollen, and her long brown tresses, which were clotted with blood, hung loosely over her shoulders. It was by no means difficult to perceive at a glance that the woman had been foully dealt with. There was a horrible wound in the face, one bullet having entered at the centre of the nose and come out at the back of the head. Another ball had penetrated the left ear, and a cut in the throat also indicated that a knife had been used. The body was taken to St. Louis, but it was several days before it could be identified. Finally, however the proprietor of one of the dance-houses in the city appeared and a single look satisfied him that the deceased's name was Ida Buckley, that she had been one of the inmates of his house and that on the evening of the murder a young man dressed in gray clothes entered the house, and, after waltzing with the girl, had disappeared in her company. Time passed and still the murderer nor his motive could not be discovered. Finally, however, the riddle was solved. A trap had been set to allure the girl from the dance hall by her own relatives. Having thus secured possession of her person they became a party to murdering her, that death was preferable to dishonor to her and disgrace to them.

Gastric Literatare.

Dr. F. K. Crosby in Scribner's for September.

M. Taine, in his "History of English Literature," has presented, in a most engaging form, those peculiarities which serve to mark that literature as distinctively English. He notes, as indeed all observers must, the faithful reflection of the habits and customs of the time in what we may call the written life of each succeeding epoch. With lapse of time these modes of thought and expression vary, so that we find the literature of England shaping itself into distinct and easily recognized eras. Yet through these epochs and through these eras we see one common trait steadily appearing; a trait so marked, so self-asserting, (and we may add, so English) that it is strange it should meet no recognition from so critical an observer. We may name it the Glorification of the Palate and the Stomach.

"Good drinking and good eating; behold the surest means of being happy," said Martin Luther, if the Catholic historians are to be trusted; and if all the maxims of the great Reformer have taken as deep root as this, then do the Mannings and the Cullens labor in vain. In his tender years, the youthful islander, be he plain Ginx or lordly Bantam, draws his mental nutriment from one source, and here we see the first inclination of the infant twig. Mother Goose, that universal classic, is placed in his hands, and he falls to gloating over the spectacle of little Jack Horner, eating his Christmas pie. But this is not all; with wistful eyes the youthful reader watches him "put in his thumb and pull out a plum," and here we behold the germ of that lingering relish with which the English writer enumerates every dish whenever a dinner chances to be mentioned. In rapid succession follow the pie of blackbirds, Miss Muffet with her curds and whey, the gastronomic preferences of Mr. and Mrs. Spratt, with a score of similar allusions; while the first glimpse of royalty that blesses the eyes of the young Briton reveals the Sovereign in the act of stealing "three pecks of barley meal to make a bag pudding;" the Queen's fondness for bread and honey is no less faithfully recorded.

In time, however, the hollowness and unreliability of Mother Goose become too painfully apparent, and the young student ascends to a higher plane. "Tom Brown's School-days at Rugby" falls into his hands, a book read by every English school-boy; and he eagerly follows his hero from the baked potatoes at Stumps' and the sausage-toasting at the hall fire, to the last day at school, when Tom and the master discover the cook's hidden dripping cake and "finish it to the last crumb." If, in an evil hour, he ventures upon "Tom Brown at Oxford," he cannot but be convinced that there is more work for jaws than for brains, at the famed university. From this point our youthful protege sets sail upon the broad sea of English Literature, and here it were well nigh useless to follow him. Reefs of dinners and suppers, ledges of luncheons and shoals of early teas, beset him on every hand. Your true English writer, it would seem, takes a vicarious pleasure in feasting his characters. Salad and sentiment combine; his Muses are always hungry.

To those of our literary friends who are anxious to acquire for their productions the true English aroma, the following suggestions will be found invaluable. A little care bestowed upon this hitherto neglected point will produce such results as shall deceive the very elect:

1st. Premising that mention has been made of a meal, let it be your aim to enlarge upon the subject to the fullest extent. Specify in detail each different dish. If the meal in question partakes of the nature of a hasty lunch, as at a wayside inn, one will suffice; "a round of cold boiled beef," which must be "attacked" and with "evident relish." Should the repast be more elaborate in its character, there is the greater scope for play of fancy. Pay due attention to arrangement: let the chief dishes be properly "flanked;" all to be "washed down with the choicest—" whatever it may be. These details having been settled, linger long and lovingly over the feast. A course of Andersonville dietetics, as a preliminary preparation to your work, cannot be too strongly recommended.

2d. Always provide plenty of kidneys. Upon this we are reluctantly obliged to insist. An omission here would be fatal to the genuine English flavor which it is our aim to impart to your works. Tom Brown drinks hot coffee and eats kidney-pie "till his little skin is stuffed full to bursting." Charles Reade exhibits to us Edouard Riviere "eating roasted kidneys with a little melted butter and parsley under them," while Tom Moore sings

"One's erudite cutlets, drest all ways but plain,
Or one's kidney, imagine Dick, done with champagne!"

3rd. Scruple not to let your characters occasionally appear as amateur cooks. Contrast heightens effect. Coming home at daylight, "Conyers beheld some lobsters just fresh from the fishmongers. After cigarettes and 'epigrams' he said, 'My greatest achievement is a lobster salad. Let me make you one, Carrington, then we shall have an appetite for bed.'" It is also advisable to make a passing allusion to a "broiled bone." This may seem a mysterious and somewhat unsatisfactory dish, but it is English, and what would you?

4th. If possible, in these portrayals, arouse yourself to genuine enthusiasm. Assume a virtue if you have it not. Few adjectives are too superlative for your use. Does not Moore celebrate

"Their glorious goose-livers and high pickled tunny?"

And Thackeray diverges from his account of a Castlewood dinner to say, in propria persona, that "stewed terrapins are worthy of any duke or even emperor." Alas! that we must say it, but the trail of the serpent is over them all, and Jean Ingelow, poetic glory of her sex, speaketh of "a glorious basin of soup, and a plate of roast beef, and some salad, and a stiff glass of spirits and water," which "delectable viands" she "could not bear should be wasted."
