Erwick.

Mr Frederic I. Felton, wife and daughter, from West Newton, Mass., came here on Saturday last, on a short trip through the provinces, visiting Mr Felton's friends--the DeWitts and Skirrens of St John--the Sanforis, Woodworths, Fooks and other relatives in this place, and at Mrs Jas. Read's, Wolford, the homestead of the late Alfred Skirren, the grandfather of Mrs Felton. Mr and Mrs Felton expressed themselves highly delighted with the old homestead--the scenery of our valleys and mountains, and with their journey--thus far. Also of their intention to enjoy the pleasure of frequent summer tours among the provincials.

Mr D. A. Shaw, after an absence of sixteen years in Southern California, has returned to visit friends and native land. Although Mr S. has been successful in seeing a compensation for himself and family in the land of his adoption he says he would not advise a ray one to leave the country to go there in the hope of making a speedy fortune any earlier than in Nova Scotia. Land booming and speculation has been overdone and the reaction is being severely felt. Large numbers of persons who a few years ago invested capital in real estate find it extremely difficult, at the present time, to realize ready cash to pay their taxes.

Rev. T. D. Hart, who is so favorably known as pastor of the Methodist circuit here for these years (1843 to 1877), and an energetic and zealous temperance worker in this county, passed through Erwick on Saturday's express from Halifax, where he had been to accompany his daughter, on her way to Japan, whether she goes to engage in missionary work under the direction of the Methodist Missionary Society of Canada. This is the second daughter Mr and Mrs Hart have given to foreign missions, and two others of them are looking forward to that work.

The Camp Meeting was opened Wednesday morning at 8 o'clock, attendance, as usual, not large at the opening. At the afternoon and evening meetings the congregations were larger. The best of order prevailed. The grounds presented a very pretty appearance. The commodious tents are tastefully arranged and furnished, and employed competent employees. Those who do not attend the Berkshire Camp Meeting this year will miss a treat, socially, intellectually and religiously.

How like the author was the poem above. He could laugh--right merrily; it was like him to laugh. Sunny-hearted and joyful, his humor was always bright and pure--never coarse and boisterous. Many articles of a humorous character he wrote, and good ones. In his article on "Noses," which appeared in the Acadian with others from his pen during that winter of '87-'88 when his pen ran so badly, humor of a striking character is displayed. But the majority of his humorous productions were never published. For reasons known to himself he never submitted them for publication. He was too severe a critic on his own writings. Two many of them were a victim only to be destroyed. In one article from his pen, on "Drugs," I remember a sentence which struck me as peculiarly original. I shall always remember it. After despatching dress--the different kinds which different people wear, he said, "Some people think if they store a fifty-dollar suit they would be good-looking; others people know that in plain clothes they are handsome." And it was the way he would sign his name to the article, Yours truly, nevertheless, Less.

An autograph of his I remember of seeing once which struck me as comical. It was this: "May your shadow never grow less."

Two little stanzas stand on the top of the next page. They were evidently the opening stanzas of a poem which the author intended to write. This is how they run: Over the meadows brown and serene, Over the mountains dark and steep, Where the birches and the maple rear Their summits to the sky-- The south winds softly, mildly blow And from the quickly thawing snow That down the mountain slope will flow, The river takes its rise.
