Quality is the first consideration in preparing these goods for the market. Extraordinary care is taken in purchasing and selecting the material and trimmings. At the mills the buyer chooses the fabric because he believes a certain piece will give satisfaction to the customer. Even the thread is examined and the closeness of the weave observed. At the top of the page we have suggested a few reasons why the material which goes into Acme goods is good. But that is only a part of their worthiness. In our own factory the material is cut up into serviceable garments according to the newest fashion. Expert designers supervise the work. Careful and experienced operators do the stitching, then follows the trimming, buttonholing, attaching buttons, pressing and finishing. After each operation examiners see that each piece is well done. This accounts for the long, pleasing service. Our one small margin of profit above the factory cost accounts for the low price you pay.
