

that I have felt more keenly than all. That it is a loss which is partially, if not wholly, due to fatigue of body and mind I know, for it returns when they seem rested. I seem to be working my way out of a storm, some days everything is so serene and hope is high and life bright, on other days I feel a depression too great for words. I have been unwilling to admit that anything had been lost in the constant pressure of the 17740

21.

Sympathy for her, and sympathy for you. Your patience and devotion surpass words and this no matter how you may feel about it. I do not feel to give you strength, and I pray for a power like yours to be of service to others in this world.
That you have considered above all else the home obligation will be I believe a comfort to you that nothing else in life could bring, but I think that with devotion