Editor's Talk

PERHAPS you've heard of Dr. Andrew McPhail, the editor of the University Magazine—which is a publication with a good deal of the "high-brow" in its make up, but peculiarly dominated by the strong personality of Andrew McPhail. The editor of this magazine will contribute to the Canadian Courier next week an article on Reciprocity. Conventional? Scarcely. Complimentary to Uncle Sam? Not necessarily. But at all events interesting and instructive.

ELSEWHERE in this issue we have set forth the contents of our Christmas Number, which will come out week after next. Never before have we got together such a galaxy of Canadian talent inside two covers—and if we haven't, who has? Six Canadian writers: Stringer, Stead, Heming, Clark—oh well, you'll discover the rest of them along with the six Canadian artists whom we need not mention here.

THIS week we have given the books an outing; down from the shelves, dust blown off, and all leaves cut, to show what Canadians, both writers and publishers, are doing on the business of book-production. It's worth while to know this. Canadians are a reading people: one good proof of which is that they buy the Canadian Courier.
