Rippling Rhymes

I'm glad to spend three cents, to mail my silly letters to divers distant gents, both creditors and debtors. I'm glad they tax a bard an added cent for mailing a bughouse postal card —such things won't start me wailing. I'm glad they cost me more, when at the cashiers' wickets, I order three or four or seven movie tickets. And very glad I am it costs an extra penny, to send a telegram to my fat sister Jennie. Oh, Uncle Sam, old scout, though cost of living waxes, you cannot scare me out by piling on the taxes! I cannot fill a trench or figure in the navy, and knock with sword or wrench, from any foe the gravy; the stern physicians say that I'm too old and dippy to drill around all day on meadows red and slippy. I always get a slap when I attempt enlisting; they say they'll win the scrap without my punk assisting. I may not go abroad. I'm barred from battle axes, but I can blow my wed and all all axes, but I is a support of land in each of three years. NATED—Room and board in private family. Address R.
