MESQUO HARBOR.
A violent storm, accompanied by heavy rain, was experienced here on the 26th inst. The harbor was very rough, and the water was very high. The wind was from the west, and the rain was very heavy. The water was very high, and the wind was very strong. The water was very high, and the wind was very strong.

MAISON HARBOR.
On the morning of the 26th inst., the eastern horizon was clear, giving a pleasant surprise; yet the wide expanse of the celestial vault was not all so peaceful in appearance, and a less experienced prophet than Wiggins could assert that the 26th of June will be a stormy day. But much more quickly than could be expected, a terrible wind and storm arose. It was nothing short of a great whirlwind about the entrance of the harbor, and the gale lasted about an hour or more. It came so suddenly that the fishing boats and not time enough to seek shelter. They were soon scattered far and near. Some were driven ashore, and others were driven out to sea. The water was very high, and the wind was very strong. The water was very high, and the wind was very strong.

THE WOMEN OF TURKEY.

Considered Ugly Without Responsibility.
Guests-At the Bath.

Turkish women are considered utterly irresponsible beings, which accounts for the constant watching they undergo. Each woman in the place, as well as among the common people, has her own sash, or nurse, who takes care of her and watches over her with the self-denying love of a mother; for an ayah takes care of a girl baby and remains with her until death. Besides the nurse she has other servants and slaves, each having her own particular duties; and imagination can not depict the utter abandonment to idleness which characterizes the Turkish women. They do not know how to kill time. They rise in the morning cross and exhausted from the impure heat of their sleeping rooms. They have no incentive to look their best during the day, and they consider their bath sufficient cleanliness, unless some ladies from other harems send word of a projected visit. In this case they rouse themselves and dress for company. No one comes uninvited, though the harem is a place of great privacy. They receive guests with charming simplicity, and act at all times like children, and with the unconscious grace. When visitors arrive they are offered first coffee, then sweetmeats, which are served in crystal glasses, with two other glasses—one full of little gold spoons, and the other empty. Each guest takes a spoon and helps herself from whatever kind she likes best, taking one spoonful and swallowing it. She must not so much as dip her spoon in a second time, nor take more than one kind, and then must place the spoon in the empty glass. Water is handed around, and then cigarettes, while she sits placidly and without reserve, though rather noisily. The women show their plainness and modesty, or their ennui, beyond this they cannot go, for it is the limit of their intelligence. When the lucidum humum thinks the hair has lasted long enough, she claps her hands for more coffee, and no matter how little time they have left, the guests must go as soon as they have taken the second cup. This is never meant as an impoliteness, but simply to show that some other engagement or other reason makes it necessary, though sometimes the lucidum humum does it to vex the younger wives who would enjoy the company of the guests longer. But it is imperative.

Either one of her children accompanies her or a friend, and she is always attended by eunuchs—great, horrible looking creatures, black and repulsive; the more repulsive in appearance, the more valuable as a bodyguard.

The bath takes up so much of a Turkish lady's time, and fills so important a place in her amusements and pleasures, that it requires special mention. The finest bath, and the most frequented, are the grand ladies of the highest harem, except those who have their own bath. It is a large, high, and the one horse couple, each filled to overflowing with water, and a lady, while the water is hot, and frequently little girls, and even a few women, are in the bath. There are often crowded with 10, 15, 20, or 30 women, and a great number of small children. The bath is constructed on entirely different principles from those in this country. The walls are made of brick, and the heat goes between them and is not oppressive. No air is kept running, and an ingenious system of ventilation, which still does not cool the air. Each successive room is hotter than the last, and the ladies and maids are arranged to lie on the floor, and the water is kept hot by a large furnace, which is a kind of a large boiler, and the water is kept hot by a large furnace, which is a kind of a large boiler, and the water is kept hot by a large furnace, which is a kind of a large boiler.

Imagine! Olive is a Teapot.

There passed Palatka not long ago a man of forty winters who was an object of pity, and yet with all that, was somewhat amusing. He was seen on all subjects but one, and that he imagined himself a teapot. He would put himself into the shape of a teapot by rounding one arm to represent the spout, and the other to represent the handle. While in that shape he became very uneasy if any one came near, fearing they might break off the handle or spout. He would not speak, but would make a danger signal with his mouth to represent the escaping steam. Then he would walk away, fully satisfied that he was a teapot.—Savannah News.

Progress in the Indian School.

The Pipe of Peace reports great progress in the Gesco Indian school. A genuine native pipe has matured seven stanzas on "The Horn," and turned them loose on the tribe. Seventy degrees, and an equal number of stanzas have been tucked away for the summer picnic season. The seventy girls in the school attend to their knitting with uncommon diligence, and heartily declare that there is not a hole in the stockings of schoolboys, 100 in number.—Chicago Herald.
