STOP YOUR CHILD'S COUGH

When a child starts coughing, mother's duty is to give the little sufferer a Peppe tablet, and this gives any weakness of the lungs. As the tablet dissolves in the child's mouth, the soothing medicinal fumes given off pass through the tender breathing passages straight to the lungs and bring immediate comfort and relief.

Peppe contains no opium or other harmful drugs, and can be given to a child (either whole or crushed to powder) with the assurance of absolute benefit.

One little Peppe at night will clear the breathing passages and let the little one sleep unbroken by coughing fits. A Peppe before starting for school in bad weather is also an invaluable safeguard for the children's throats and chests. All dealers, 50c. box.

DECREASE IN ANTHRACITE SHIPMENTS DUE TO FLU EPIDEMIC.

Philadelphia, Nov. 29.—Anthracite shipments in October totalled 6,236,266 tons, indicating, according to figures issued to-day by the Anthracite Bureau of Information a decrease of $2,484 tons compared with the same month last year.

The shrinkage was directly traceable to the influenza epidemic, which was especially severe in the hard coal region.

Shipments since the coal year set in, which in April, have reached 46,909,757 tons, against 46,780,815 tons for the same time last year. This month's figures are not included.

ANTWERP LOST NO BEAUTY IN WAR'S HORRORS

Philip Gibbs Finds Grand Old Seaport Like Dream City—Homage to its King—Gallant Soldier-King Drives Thru Flurry of Petals to Cathedral.

(By Philip Gibbs.)

With the British armies, Nov. 26.—In my message yesterday from Antwerp I had only time to give a glimpse of the King's entry and of the scenes in the streets. It was raining then, but as soon as the King crossed the Scheldt by the ferryboat, which takes over motor cars as well as men, the sunshine broke through the wet mists and brought out the colors of all this pageantry which had been gray before. Antwerp is a city in which medievalism lives with modernity, and where old spires and towers of churches and houses built three hundred years ago and more are wedged in between public buildings and shops belonging to the growth of prosperity in the half century before the war. But yesterday, with long banners and standards floating down its streets and hoisted upon balconies of the belfry and falling in waves of rich color from many balconies, there was a sense of old things rather than of new, and the ancient history of this sea port, with its merchant princes, was about one as one walked.

So it was with the people in the streets. A boy scout was perched on my motor car to guide the way, and the Antwerp policemen were so like the London bobbies that I wanted to ask the time of them, just for old time sake, and the crowds were made up of well-dressed men and women, such as one might see in Liverpool on a day of public festival.

But among these crowds were figures belonging to the past, as one sees it in old Flemish pictures, Franciscan Friars, with their cowls turned back so that one saw their shaven crowns, raised themselves on tip-toe of their sandaled feet to get a glimpse of the King. From lattice windows under high gables roared about the cathedral, men poked their heads out and laughed and cheered and went a little, as the Belgian soldiers carried their colors past the King. The Bishop paced down the narrow avenue between the people behind the guards; and there were nervous sounds every few minutes and shrill cries when the mounted soldiers put the weight of their horses against them.

Commissaries of police, in cocked hats, exhorted the people to keep their lines; but they were closed in by wild rushes when the King and Queen came in their motor car behind a cavalry escort. Their car was laden with flowers which had been given to them. On the steps of the Hotel De Ville the sun glinted on to the gold work on that master piece of the Flemish guilds; and now from scores of windows more flowers fell, so that they drove through a flurry of red and white petals.

Before they went to the saluting base, there was a procession which made an emotion pass down the lines of the people like a wave. It was a crowd of men walking very slowly by the help of crutches and sticks with a banner above them. Some of them were in the uniform of the Belgian colors. They were the men who had been in the street in Antwerp in October of the first year of the war, and with their bodies had barred the way for a little while to the invading hordes.

The march past of the Belgian troops who had fought in the latter battles at Dixmude, and at Perysso, on the mud banks of the Yser, and at Merkem, a month or two ago, was a stirring thing to see. Just four years ago I used to see men like this, covered in mud and blood, laid out in rows on stretchers. I saw many of them die. These men, who marched through Antwerp yesterday, had lived to see the liberation of their country, and they were the lucky ones.

Saluted Belgian Dead.

We saluted the memory of those who had fallen, when the Belgian colors passed, and from thousands of throats there came a shout of "Le Drapeau." Belgian machine guns were drawn on light carriages by dogs, marching with wonderful discipline, and the guns were garlanded as pretty toys. Not long ago they were hidden behind rushes in a swamp and speaking in that chat-a-chatter, which, if the world has any luck, will not be heard again in the fields of France or Belgium.

There was a Te Deum in the Cathedral, but I could get no further than the transport, because of the crowds there standing to get a glimpse of the King. Before the high altar I could see the "Descent From the Cross," by Rubens, with its rich color like a great bouquet of flowers, and the figures of the light shiners, and above the people long silken banners were draped from tall pillars. The air was full of the murmur of voices came down the aisle, the whispering of those about me; and through the crowd I saw there in the square where other crowds were around the statue of Peter Paul Rubens.

All over Antwerp bells were ringing their notes, mingling in a strange, clashing melody; and from the belfry of the Cathedral the chiming of the gay chimes came tinkling down. There were playing "The Marseillaise."

I went out of the Cathedral into Place Verte, the statue of Rubens, and in the crowds I had conversation with people who stared at my uniform and then said: "Are you English?" and after that they became excited and said: "England forever."

Belgian girls, made grave little faces, but their eyes, by heart, thanked England for all she had done for Belgium; some of them had been refugees in England for a year or more, and leaped our language before coming back by way of Holland. Withal it is good to know that real love of us is in their hearts.

Two Italian Prisoners.

Two men in the crowd were not Belgian, but Italian. They were men who raised their hands to them as they passed. They were tall, sturdy fellows, with dark eyes and curly hair, and they were Italian prisoners of war. They were captured by the enemy seven months ago and had lived miserably until the work was done, and they were now being sent back to Italy to fight for his country as soon as the call came. Now they were happy, like lots of other men, who tramped many miles since the day when the Germans said: "You can go. We have no more use for you."

In the crowds at Antwerp I heard about the last days of the enemy in that city, which some of them hoped to see again. The Germans here, in their quarters staff, which was established at the Hotel Terminus, read the terms of the armistice with loud faces, and were profoundly downcast. They were not happy, like lots of other men, who tramped many miles since the day when the Germans said: "You can go. We have no more use for you."

"If cannot be helped, we have done all we could do with this war, and we lost. Now we must pay the price of defeat."

Most of the high officers left in a hurry, but others who could not leave as soon were men who were frightened when the red flag was raised, as I have already told. German machines, organized revolutionary army committees, for several days ruled Antwerp, issuing a proclamation to the people not to intervene, and ordering them to stay inside their houses between 8 o'clock in the evening and 5 in the morning. Parties of them, led by non-commissioned officers, went around the cafes and restaurants, searching for officers, revolver in hand, and tore off their epaulettes and all orders of rank. One young officer who resisted was shot dead. Others submitted instantly.

Was Like Dream City.

Most of this work was done by German marines, but the infantry also took part in it. There was no orderly withdrawal from Antwerp, but gradually the Germans filtered out in small groups and by twos and threes, until not one was left a few days ago.

The pilot of the ferryboat, over the Scheldt told me the Germans attempted to fraternize with the Belgian people towards the end. "But it was too late," he said.

Antwerp has its light up at night and as darkness fell yesterday and I looked back at it across the Scheldt, all its spires and docks and the old castle called the Steen, and the huge tower of the Cathedral and many spires and battlements, and roofs, were all glamorous, like a dream city, and war had not changed or spoiled the beauty of this seaport.

All is not gold that shows up in a glittering mining prospectus.

GREATER PRODUCTION CAMPAIGN ON INDIAN RESERVES

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—An official report made to Hon. Arthur Meighen by Mr. W. M. Graham, who was appointed commissioner to take charge of the greater production campaign on the western Indian reserves shows that the campaign has been a remarkable success and that preparations are being made for production on a greater scale than ever next season.

Five greater production farms have been located on western reserves and a large amount of land has been ploughed this fall ready for seeding. The farms are situated as follows: "Gleichen, Alberta, Blackfoot Reserve, 2,500 acres; Chiny, Alberta, Blackfoot Reserve, 550 acres; McLeod, Alberta, Blood Reserve, 5,000 acres; Edenwold, Saskatchewan, Muscowpetung Reserve, 2,800 acres; Broadview, Sask., Crooked Lakes Reserve, 2,800 acres; Sintulata, Saskatchewan, Assiniboine Reserve, 1,000 acres.

Sixteen large gas tractors were used continuously almost night and day to bring this land under cultivation. Bank and cook houses have been built to accommodate men and granaries are being erected. It will take thirty-six thousand bushels of wheat to seed this land. The best pure bred marquis wheat alone is being used.

THE RETIRING GERMANS EAGER TO GET BACK HOME

Not a Great Deal of Discipline Among the German Troops Moving Along the Roads Before the Advancing Allies—French Troops Continue Their Advance.

American Army of Occupation, Nov. 25.—(By the Associated Press)—Most of the Germans in the retiring army have shown keen eagerness on reaching German soil to return to their homes immediately and engage actively in their civilian occupations, according to reports. A movement of the other way by Austrians and Lorrainers who have been in the German army, is in progress. Many of them have been released by the Germans or given passes by Soldiers' and Sailors' Committees and have reached the American lines.

A great deal of discipline among the German troops moving along the roads is reported. They are doing much as they please while the officers are not attempting to take severe measures because of the feeling of the men against them. Instances of petty looting in various regions are occurring, according to accounts coming in.

The German communists continue to communicate with the Third Army by wireless informing them of the German progress each day.

Paris, Nov. 25.—(Havas)—On the French front the troops continued their advance during the course of yesterday. In Luxembourg, where they occupied Metz, Bellen, Heisterbach, and Lemerle, and also in Lorraine, where the French are along the River Luxembourg, French cavalry has entered Luxembourg.

VICTIMS OF CONSPIRACY, SAYS THOMAS MOONEY

San Francisco, Nov. 23.—Thomas Mooney, a San Francisco labor leader convicted of murder, to-day issued a statement through his wife, discussing the report of John B. Denmore, federal director of employment, who made an investigation of the Mooney case.

The report made public yesterday, revealed alleged conspiracies in other cases which tends to involve many of the officials who were connected with the bomb explosion trial.

Mooney's statement follows: "The Denmore disclosure speaks for itself. Just think what a similar investigation would have disclosed if it was inaugurated in the early stages of the frame-up!"

"These corrupt forces cover the state of California and labor can expect no justice from these financial 'indis operating under the guise of 'GIVE 'SYRUP OF FIGS' TO CONSTIPATED CHILD.

COMMON PEOPLE OF AUSTRIA DO NOT REGRET BREAKUP

Vienna, Wednesday, Nov. 20.—(By the Associated Press)—The biggest fact apparent in Austria's breaking up of housekeeping is that there is no poignant regret among the common people. The sentiment generally found was expressed by a soldier the correspondent met among the rivers of men retreating from the Italian front. He said: "Now the war is over and we are brothers, whether French, British or Americans. Any kind of a brother is a good one."

Along the line coming up from Trieste to Vienna the correspondent talked with dozens of officers, who were disappointed greatly because their defeat had been at the hands of the Italians, whose military qualities they always had scorned.

"If anybody else had done it we would not mind," said one General, who said that the defeat might be attributed to three reasons: Hungary's withdrawal of support and troops, the war-tiredness of the Austrians and President Wilson's notes culminating in his refusal to treat with Emperor Charles.

These reasons, he said, brought about the final smash, with the soldiers refusing to fight when attacked by the Italians.

Ottawa, Nov. 25.—While no official announcement is forthcoming it is understood that H. J. Daly, head of the S. J. Daly Company of Ottawa, will give personal supervision to the reconstruction and repairation. He will give personal supervision to the reconstruction of all uncompleted buildings with after-war conditions.
