A Terrible Tangle.

CHAPTER XIII.

MY HEART ASKS HIM.

And now as they stood so close to one another, and it was plain to the man that Elizabeth had drifted almost out of his reach, that those threads which had bound her to him so closely when he had played the part of a tender friend had been rudely severed by this last attitude of his, he could hardly restrain his fury.

As though to start warfare, he began now to ply Lillian with attention. He adopted a soft, tender manner, and pleaded and chided, with her as though she were precious to him.

"Of course you will not dream of going to-night," he said. "I will send you those books I promised, and probably will run in and sit with you after dinner; and I think we must get you out of town. If Henry cannot travel—well, you will have to go without him. Your health is too precious to be risked in any way."

Elizabeth's heart sank as she noticed how Lill thrilled at his voice, glancing up at him eagerly and accepting his empty words as meaning so very, very much.

Twitching of the Nerves

A Distressing Symptom of Nervous Exhaustion Cured by Dr. Chase's Nerve Food.

Mrs. John McKellar. What sympathy you feel for anyone whose nerves twitch and jerk, and what resolves you make to never allow your nervous system to become exhausted, until paralysis of some form claims you as a victim.

The only way is to watch the warning symptoms, such as sleeplessness, headache, indigestion, tired feelings and irritability. By the prompt use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food you can feed the feeble, wasted nerves back to health and vigor, restore the vitality of the body, and prevent serious disease.

Mrs. John McKellar, 11 Barton street east, Hamilton, Ont., writes:—"I was injured some years ago, and that left me with a broken-down nervous system. I could not sleep, and suffered from twitching of the nerves and disagreeable nervous sensations. It then began using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and can say that I never used any medicine that did me so much good; in fact, I am entirely cured of my old trouble. The Nerve Food not only strengthened the nerves, but also built up my system in every way." Under date of Aug. 29, 1912, Mrs. McKellar writes, confirming her cure, and states that she has had no quiver from many people who had heard of the great benefits she obtained from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. fection for the man whom Lill had married.

Thought of Elizabeth had become a kind of obsession with him, and since that last and very explicit interview which had passed between them at the White Farm, he had passed his days in seeking a way to bend her will to his.

When the news came that David Barostan had inherited a large fortune, Lord Ottershaw felt as though he had been struck a blow; not that he credited Elizabeth with mercenary feelings, but because it completely changed the position of affairs—made her marriage conventional, in a sense and put Barostan almost on the same footing with herself.

He avoided meeting his mother in these days, because he did not wish to make an open declaration to her of the real animosity that was filling his veins for Ellen Griffin, and all his old and cordial liking for Elizabeth's kinswoman had completely withered away.

He knew that Mrs. Griffin had sided against him, and that Elizabeth had lacked strength of will to oppose him, Ellen Griffin would have done her best to supply this strength.

The sight of these two together constantly was an irritant to him. The knowledge that Elizabeth was regarded already as a beauty, and was sought after by the world, inflamed the man's passion for her. Though he was not a snob, he was nevertheless a man who set great store on the world's opinion.

For brief period his better nature had been awakened, and, maybe, nothing had happened to stand between himself and Elizabeth, Lord Ottershaw might have risen to really great things; as it was, he had gone back further than ever he had been.

He neglected all those duties that should have been his life's work; and so soon as he realized that Elizabeth was settled in town, he sat himself deliberately to work some punishment on her. And the best, the surest, way of doing this was, he felt, through her sister.

To succeed in entangling Lill was no difficult task, and, indeed, Ottershaw, at certain moments, felt a contempt for himself. It remained, however, for this meeting with Elizabeth to press this home, and the remembrance of her scornful eyes burned him as he drove away. He felt that every word that she had spoken at the little farm was weighted with truth, and that his power over her was absolutely gone.

Such a realization was devastating to a nature like his. He felt capable at this hour of committing it mattered not what act of madness, so that he might have the satisfaction of crushing Elizabeth's spirit, of regaining his mastery over her.

He passed up to his rooms in a sultry mood, far different from the pleasant, boyish manner that once used to characterize him.

His valet, an old servant who had graduated in his mother's household took his hat and coat, and looked at his master's frowning white face with real anxiety at his heart.

Perhaps this man, who served him better than all the rest, saw how Ottershaw was changed.

The earl's frown deepened when he heard that his mother had called.

How to Make Better Cough Syrup than
You Can Buy
A Family Supply, Saving $3 and Fully Guaranteed.

Sixteen ounces of cough syrup—as much as you could buy for $2.50—can easily be made at home. You will find nothing that takes hold of an obstinate cough more quickly, usually ending it inside of 24 hours. Excellent, too, for croup, whooping cough, sore lungs, asthma, hoarseness and other throat troubles.

Mix two cups of granulated sugar with one cup of warm water, and stir for two minutes. Put ½ ounce of Pinex (fifty cents' worth) in a 16-ounce bottle, then add the Sugar Syrup. It keeps perfectly. Take a teaspoonful every one, two or three hours.

This is just laxative enough to help cure a cough. Also stimulates the appetite, which is usually upset by a cough. The taste is pleasant.

"Her ladyship left this note, my lord," said the servant. Ottershaw threw the note on the table, and did not even trouble to glance at the other letters that were waiting for him.

A moment or two later, when he was alone, he picked up his mother's letter and impatiently tore it open.

He expected a reproach, for Lady Ottershaw had been in town for several days just now, and he was neglecting her in a way that she must regard as strange; but his mother made no reference to this—she wrote on another matter.

"I am sorry not to see you, my dear one, for I have something of importance to tell you—at least, it is important to me. I obeyed your wish, expressed when we were up in the North, not to write to poor Mrs. Hammond or to investigate the affair of the poor girl's disappearance, but circumstances in the most strange manner have brought me a kind of proof that the girl does live, and has lately been seen in London. I scribble this information to you only because I want you to take from me the seal of silence that you imposed. Believe me, my dearest boy, it is only my duty to let that poor mother have this ray of hope. You know I do not wish to oppose you in any way whatever. Perhaps you will let me hear from you by to-night's post. Ever your devoted

"MOTHER."

Then, underneath, Lady Ottershaw had scribbled:

"You will, of course, find me at home any time this evening."
