WHY IS A HOTEL CLERK?

Why is a hotel clerk?

Is he a sort of human mechanism stuck behind the hotel desk simply to attend to mechanical details, to say with a cold, impersonal face: "Register, please." "What time would you like to be called?" To hand the guests their keys and receive their room numbers?

Is he a sort of host, representing the hotel in his relation to the guests, and trying in every way to make them feel welcome, to handle their business fairly but tactfully, to give them their comfort and to fill their hearts with a sense of satisfaction and ease to come again?

Is he, of course, a hotel clerk, and the second sort of a clerk, he is far more often the latter.

He Has An Expression. I think I know you. I realize the average hotel clerk and he isn't a mere mechanism with an expressionless face. His face is a picture of his soul.

Let Me Know What He Says. Why is a hotel clerk? To make the guest feel comfortable or uncomfortable?

You might ask the next clerk who meet who doesn't seem to have found out.

I can just see the haughty incredulity with which he would receive the inquiry and label you a nut.

But it might give him something to think about at that.

You perceive that I suggest this as an experiment for you, not me. I know my limitations and I know how utterly I lack the courage, but I assume you don't.

Back From the Dead

REMARKABLE RESTORATION OF A CHILD BELIEVED DROWNED.

Inhabitants of the Leicestershire town of Hickley are discussing the remarkable restoration of a child believed to be dead. Mrs. Mann, of Mansion street, temporarily left the room in which she was doing the family washing, in order that one of her arms, which was injured, might be attended to. On her return she was horrified to find that her little boy, Harry, had fallen into a bit of water. Mrs. Mann's screams quickly brought neighbours on the scene, and the little boy was got out black in the face. The neighbours who gathered around could detect no movement, and the child was regarded as dead. One of the women, however, was so overcome with emotion that she ran into the street and became hysterical. The attention of Mr. Will Sanders, who is employed by the Leicestershire and Warwickshire Electric Power Co., was attracted, and he proceeded to the house where the boy lay. Sanders had considerable experience on the battlefield in restorative measures, and notwithstanding the belief of everybody present that the child was beyond human aid, he hopefully set to work to apply artificial respiration. This he kept up without a break for an hour and 20 minutes, and his efforts were rewarded by signs of returning animation. He continued until the child came round completely, to the surprise of the parents and neighbours.

Foresters Find Hidden Glacier

TACOMA, Wash., Oct. 23 (A.P.)—A new glacier has been discovered in the Olympic mountains by forest rangers. It was found on Muncaster mountain. Four foresters climbed the mountain, 7,000 feet high, and learned that the peak was split into two parts with a large glacier between them. The ice field is a mile wide.

The Olympic peninsula, between Puget Sound and the Pacific Ocean, is one of the wildest regions in the country. Parts of it have not yet been penetrated.

Mothers!

Give the children WRIGLEY'S after every meal

A prominent physician says:

"It is surprising how free from decay the teeth can be kept by using gum after each meal."

You know how hard it is to get the children to clean their teeth. By giving them WRIGLEY'S you not only reward them for cleaning their teeth, but the reward is actually the means of performing this important service!

WRIGLEY'S aids digestion too, and acts as an anti-septic wash for the mouth and throat. Several flavors—all of WRIGLEY'S quality.

Zaghloul's Claims

IMPOSSIBLE DEMANDS ON BEHALF OF EGYPT.

Light has been promptly shed by Prime Minister MacDonald upon his conversations with Zaghlul Pasha, which came to an end recently. The nature of the demands put forward on behalf of Egypt are stated in a dispatch to Lord Allenby, the High Commissioner for Egypt and the Sudan. The points on which Zaghlul insisted were:

- The withdrawal of all British forces from Egyptian territory.
- The withdrawal of the financial and judicial advisers.
- The disappearance of all British control over the Egyptian Government, notably in connection with foreign relations which Zaghlul Pasha claimed were hampered by the notification of his Majesty's Government to foreign Powers on March 15, 1922, that they would regard as an unfriendly act any attempt at interference in the affairs of Egypt by another Power.
- The abandonment by his Majesty's Government of their claim to protect foreigners and minorities in Egypt.
- The abandonment of his Majesty's Government of their claim to share in any way in protecting the Suez Canal.

Mr. MacDonald found it impossible to agree to any of these demands, although he does not rule out the possibility of an agreement, given good will on both sides. Zaghlul is told bluntly that his claim for Egypt's complete rights of ownership over the Sudan, and his characterization of the British as usurpers, have by their effect on the minds of Egyptians employed in the Sudan, and the Sudanese personnel of the Egyptian Army, produced an entire change in Anglo-Egyptian co-operation in the Sudan. He warned that the propaganda that is being carried on in the Sudan cannot be allowed to continue.

"I promised," writes Mr. MacDonald, "in the course of our first conversation to be perfectly frank with his Excellency. Then and subsequently, I left him under no illusion as to the position which H.M. Government are compelled to take up in regard to Egypt and the Sudan."

In short, Zaghlul's attitude rendered even the basis of an agreement impossible. On the question of the Canal, which Mr. MacDonald says that he raised straight away, the British Prime Minister laid down the fundamental maxim that "It is no less true to-day than in 1922 that the security of the communications of the British Empire in Egypt remains a vital British interest, and that absolute certainty that the Suez Canal will remain open in peace as well as in war for the free passage of British ships is the foundation on which the entire defensive strategy of the British Empire rests." The lesson of 1914 has been learnt, and no British Government, explains the Prime Minister, can divest itself wholly even in favour of an Ally of its interest in guarding such a vital link in British communications. At the same time, Mr. MacDonald considers that Great Britain and Egypt could have solved the question by effective co-operation in a Treaty of close alliance. The retention of British troops in the Canal zone is in no way incompatible with Egyptian independence under such a Treaty, he argues.—News of the World.

IMITATION OPTIMISTS.

Cheap optimists are smiling when things are all serene; we see them smiling with high and cheerful mien, the passing crowds being wittling with it h maxims smooth and keen. They feel like four-time winners in new, expensive suits, they've had abundant dinners, they're smoking good cheroots; they say to sighing sinners: "Let sorrow shoot the chutes. This life is fine and fifty, all wool and three feet wide; for every trouble, fifty great blessings are supplied; woe is infirm and shifty, just smile and it will slide." Along the street called Easy the sunshine fakers dwell; and proverbs bright and breezy they give away or sell; but when the luck grows cheery they wring their hands and yell. It's easy to be sunny when one is amply fed, and has his jam and honey to spread upon his bread, and forty kinds of money to paint the village red. But now and then a fellow turns up who makes a hit; his luck is always yellow, misfortunes never quit; and still, serene and mellow, he smiles and does his bit. Undaunted and untrifling he goes his humble ways, with tranquil soul, requiring but little all his days, thus by his course inspiring the feeble hearted jays. Of words our store is ample, they flood us day and night; on maxims we may trample by turning left or right; it is the good example that leads men to the height.

Regiments of Cooks

LABOR TO FEED BRITISH ROYALISTS.

LONDON.—(A.P.)—The royal kitchens at Windsor Castle and Buckingham Palace, which were overhauled during the absence of the King and Queen in the Scottish Highlands and are now spick and span, are very interesting institutions.

It is said there is no royal house in the world where the kitchens are so well arranged as in the griny gray castle at Windsor, the home of Elizabeth sovereigns since the days of William the Conqueror. Built originally centuries ago, they have been modified from time to time to meet the needs of changed conditions, but wherever possible the old has been preserved and not infrequently English beef is served to King George which has been roasted on a spit that did duty in the days of the Plantagenet Kings.

Until the time of King Edward the royal menus were published for the benefit of the public, but King Edward abolished the practice and his son King George has followed suit.

Each kitchen at Windsor has a chef. One devotes himself to roasts, another to soups, a third to entrees, a fourth to pastries, etc. At the orders of each chef are four cooks who have under them a good-sized corps of assistants, altogether a force large enough to take care of the extraordinary demands upon the royal larder.

No half-way measures for sleeves—they are either very long or very short.

Add them to the creamed sugar and butter; then add the liquid and the sifted dry ingredients, alternately. Add vanilla.
