The Maiden's Choice
OR THE LAIRD OF BIRKENLEUGH
A Tale of the Covenanters.

When Sir Gilbert reached this point in the paper, it seemed as if an earthquake had shaken the ground on which he stood, so electrified was he by the fact revealed. He could do nothing but stare dumbly at Helen, with open eyes and mouth.
'That is why I said yesterday's marriage was invalid,' remarked Helen, quietly.
'Of course it is,' shouted the Baronet exultingly. 'The law wunna marry a woman to her half-brother. And dis Charlie ken o' this?'

'He does.'
'And what said he, then?'
'Alas, Sir Gilbert, I blush to say how horrible was his proposition. It opened my eyes in a moment to his true character. It was not till I had left him with his friends below, and retired to my own chamber, that I opened the packet and read its contents. When I did, and knew the truth, I waited impatiently for his coming, never doubting that he would acquiesce in the course of action necessary. To my amazement, he coolly admitted his knowledge of the falsehood told by my father—by Jabez Cringan, I mean—and, oh, horror, proposed to burn the paper, conceal its contents from every mortal, and live together as if we had never known of it.
'The brute beast!' said the Baronet, in a tone of energetic disgust. 'But what ye say dinst surprise me, for naething's ower bad for that selfish unprincipled rascal to attempt. And hoo came ye on then?'

'I shudder when I think of it,' she replied. 'I turned to leave him on the instant, but he intercepted me, and locked the door. Then he endeavoured to burn the papers which had been in the packet, and one of these also succeeded in destroying. I put forth all the strength in my power to prevent the deed, but my weak woman's power was not able to cope with his. He endeavoured to smother the other papers from my grasp, but, filled now with terror and despair, I rushed wildly from the room by an opposite door. In darting after me, he stumbled and fell to the ground, overturning the table, and bringing the burning lamp down on him. Without waiting to see the result, I darted into the passage, and opened a strong door which faced me. I had bolts inside, and these I drew, which secured me against his pursuit. It was a turret chamber into which I had retired, and a winding stair led to a side door on the terrace. I gained that door, and after much difficulty, succeeded in opening it. Then I was free, and fled at my swiftest speed through the woods and across the heights till I reached Brankwood. I saw no human creature on the way; but Lion came to me in the park, and with him by my side I felt I was safe.
'Puddin' and painches, but yer a brave and a guid lassie,' cried the Baronet, in a tone of hearty admiration. 'I dinna ken hoo guid I am ta' find ye the right-hearted queen I have counted ye till o' late. For oh, Helen, sair did I grieve ower yer waeft backslidin', as I believed it. It is a' the mair destroyed my faith in womankind a'thegither. But the hail matter is explained now, and ye are since mair the guid and the true Helen Cringan.'
Helen's fair face—wan and worn as the past months of suffering had made it—flushed with pleasure, and her eyes sparkled with joy, as she listened to the Baronet's honest eulogy. She felt that she was now to be amply repaid for the trials she had endured.

'But hoo in a' the earth,' he suddenly asked, 'did this paper happen to be in a packet among my mother's effects, wi' written instructions that it should be given to ye on yer marriage day? Had ye gotten it before, this terrible business wadna ha' happened.'
'Lady Barton calculated that I would be married to Richard Wyndham, in which case all would have been as usual, and the trials of my marriage day? Had ye gotten it before, this terrible business wadna ha' happened.'
'Lady Barton calculated that I would be married to Richard Wyndham, in which case all would have been as usual, and the trials of my marriage day? Had ye gotten it before, this terrible business wadna ha' happened.'
'Lady Barton calculated that I would be married to Richard Wyndham, in which case all would have been as usual, and the trials of my marriage day? Had ye gotten it before, this terrible business wadna ha' happened.'

'Helen,' he said, 'you are dreaming.'
'No Sir Gilbert, I am not. The packet contained another paper, written by your mother, Lady Barton. That was the paper I told you of, which Charlie destroyed, but it contained momentous tidings for you.
'Puddin' and painches, what's tae come next?' exclaimed the Baronet, his round jolly face turning pale, and assuming an aspect of excessive agitation and suspense. 'Tae come for me, ye say; tae come for me! For the love o' guidness, lassie, be quick and tell me what it is. This is a subject I canna trifle wi'.
'Oh, I wish I could have saved the paper, for the truth would have come far better from it than from my lips. But the tidings are joyous ones, Sir Gilbert. In a word—you have a son.
He started up, gazed wildly at her a moment, then burst out—
'Helen Cringan this is the cruellest mockery.'
'No, Sir Gilbert, it is the truth. You were deceived at the time. The nurse deceived you.'
'My God! Hoo?—tell me hoo.'
'By concealing from you the fact that your wife had born twins—one dead, the other alive. You saw the dead child, but never heard of the living one. She carried it to Lady Barton, and told her all.'

RAFFLE FOR A WIFE.—The Buffalo Express says that a man in that city has advertised a raffle of his wife. The following is a copy of the advertisement:—
'Raffle of the wife of Thomas Doyle at Wolf's Hall, Court Street, on Monday, March 23rd, 1868. This woman is a good housekeeper and is willing to stay with any one who may draw her. Tickets 25 cents.'

LAST OFFICIAL ACT.—An English paper states that one of the last official acts of Lord Derby was to authorize a grant of £30 from the Royal Bounty Fund in favor of the widow and children of the late Professor McGauley. The late Sir David Brewster was instrumental in recommending the grant.
The rumor of an expected attack upon Washington by a rebel army from Virginia, appears to have originated in the fact that the celebrated guerilla, Moeby had been in Washington during the early part of last week, and is said to have purchased a number of cavalry saddles at a Government auction sale. Putting that and that together, Stanton came to the conclusion the capital was in danger, and issued the precautionary orders which caused so much excitement.
The venerable belle of Baltimore, Madame Bonaparte—widow of Jerome—preserves herself from wrinkles by abstaining carefully from both laughter and tears. She also nightly encases her taper fingers in metallic thimbles, and, "consequently," says Jenkins, "her hands retain much of their original symmetry."
