ROSE AND OTHERS FULLY CONFESS

District Attorney Told of Men Who Did the Actual evening, pounded one against the other until they all broke down and said that Rosenthal was shot down in front of the Metropole by a hired gang because Lieut. Becker wanted it done

The grand jury acted speedily. With their confessions warm on their lips, Rose, Webber and Vallon went before the Bible and swore that they had told the whole truth. Within an hour the former commander of the strongarm squad was in a cell in the Tombs. But the men who placed him there did not dare to leave the district attorney's office. Shaking with fear, they begged the district attorney to keep them for the night in his office. And there they stayed under guard of four of Mr. Whitman's detectives. Details of the Plot.

Rose's confession, the most vital of the three, details how Becker six weeks ago told him that Herman Rosenthal had lived too long, that Rosenthai had to be put out of the way, and that the men who did the job had nothing to fear, because he, Becker, was a power in the police de-partment. So Rose went out and spread the word that the strong-arm commander said that Rosenthal must be killed. He dropped hints here and there. He did more. He sent for Big Jack Selig and held a conference with that notorious gang leader of the East Side. Through Selig, ranging down-ward through the strata of thugs and hired assassins, the arrangements thal by this arrangement were Whitey Lewis, Letty Loule, Dago Frank, and Gib the Blood. Bose admits that he rounded them up that night, and saw that they were poised for the crime. It was for this purpose that the gray that they were poised for the gray to going to talk.

Of a hair. Rose had said to him:

There won't be much fuss over this."

Told of the Murder.

A few minutes later in the shadows of the Murray Hill baths in Fortysecond street, just west of Sixth avenue, Lieut. Becker, calm and collected, and with perfect confidence in his rereassurance to the nervous and trembling Rose, said: "Don't you be worried about this matter. I'll see to it that none of the boys get into jail."

For two days after that whispered with Rose, calling him up twice a day at Harry Pollock's house, and discussing with him "matters that had to be looked into." And Becker house, and straight to Webber in the Tombs and knew exactly where to find Rose when advised went out from the office of the word Mayor Gaynor that Rose had to be found, or that much trouble would the arrangement, and after a discusmeet up with certain policemen. it was not at Far Rockaway, but at with Mr. Whitman to have all Pollock's house, that Becker conveyed men brought to the district attorney's to Jack Rose the hint that it would private office. This was shortly after best for diplomatic reasons to appear at police headquarters.

Graft Higher Up.
The bald gambler, who included in his confession a frank statement that for a long time he had been collecting money from gambling houses not only for Becker, but for officials higher up in the police department, swears he did not know that murder was to done the night his hired thugs met at "Bridgie" Webber's and sat there waiting for the signal that Rosenthal, the squealer, the man who had shout-

New York, July 29.—Lieut. Charles Becker was arrested tonight and held by Judge Mulqueen for murder in the first degree after Jack Rose, Becker's collector of gambling money, had confessed that the police lieutenant had ordered him to have Herman Rosenthal killed.

The arrest and arraignment of Becker followed swiftly after Rose's confession, and the confessions of Bridgie Webber and Harry Vallon, who corroborated Rose in important particulars. District Attorney Whitman, questioning the "three prisoners for four hours this afternoon and this evening, pounded one against the

Other Confessions Coming. What with these three confesions, the district attorney and his advisers believed tonight that they have already an unbreakable case against Becker. But they have the word that other confessions are just around the corner—that the weakening of Rose, the man familiar with the details of the arrangements, the man who was the go-between and scout will serve to melt the reserve of the other conspirators. It can be said that every man now held for murder, except Becker, will be immunized if they tell the whole truth about the plot and its consummation.

The confessions that revealed perhap the most extraordinary story of officially instigated crime that the city ever knew, were the result of an arrangement made by the district attorney with Max Steur, counsel for Bridgie Webber, and with James H. Sullivan, the lawyer for Jack Rose, and who represented also Harrry Vallon, whose interests were bound up largely with thoe of Webber, his gambling partner, and with Jack Rose, his old-time friend.

Last Friday Mr. Sullivan made up his mind that it would be best for Rose to tell the fruth. He had had many talks with his client. He knew That by this arrangement were Whitey of a hair. Rose had said to him: "I his family decided to come to Can-

Mr. Sullivan knew then that Rose was terrified, through and through. He told Becker that it was a. He knew that the gambler, whose easy-going spirit and amiable habits had been shaken and torn by the muras a gun-fighter or a bad man in the sense of thug), and he was uncertain and hesitating about the right course to follow. All of these things Mr. Sullivan reported to Mr. Whitman, And the district attorney, playing his hand very carefully, let it be known that the case against Rose was already so bad that Rose might expect an indictment. This afternoon Mr. Sullivan notified the district attorney that Rose was ready to confess.

Took Lawyer's Advice.

At the same time the readiness of Bridgie Webber to turn state's witness was communicated to Mr. Whitman by Webber's new lawyer Max his client to make a clean breast before the district attorney Vallon was anxious to be included in decided by the lawyers So sion it was the adjournment of the hearings on the cases of Rose, Vallon, Libby, Shapiro, Sullivan and "Dago" Frank

For half an hour the district at torney Steur and Sullivan conferred. Then Judge Mulqueen was informed that a confession was to be made, and asked if he would remain in chambers during the early part of the night.

The judge consented instantly, and left the criminal courts kilding for the briefest possible dinner.

Early in the day the grand jurors listened to a feature of the Mrs. E. Wells. gambling investigation as it concerned Rosenthal's charges against Becker. But the jurymen had gone home. At 5 o'clock this afternoon, against when the district attorney knew to a certainty that there would be work hat night for the grand jury, he Klings, of his staff, to lireced Mr.

convene the body. The order was unprecedented so far as the most veteran members of the district attorney's staff knew. Certainly never before in Mr. Whitman's time has it been necessary to recall a grand jury after that body had finished its work for the day.

Arranged Weeks Before. The murder was ordered and arranged so thoughtfully and deliber-ately, Jack Rose says in his confession, as ever crime was projected Weeks before the murder Lieut Weeks before the murder Li Becker sent word to Rose that wanted to see him on an especially important subject. They met uptown, far removed from the spies and chatterers of the Tenderloin.
