He put his signature to a contract that couldn't be broken with one of the Kaiser's 42-centimeter guns. The parchment called for five years of service at a big salary, with the tenday clause deleted, as the consors say.

Under the terms of the parchment Thorpe can't be farmed out or even slapped on the wrist for violating any of McGraw's rules. The only power reserved by the Giants is to pay him his salary. Otherwise they havon't a word to say.

Of course Thorpe has never made good. To be brutally blunt, he hasn't even pastimed like a class A man, but McGraw has to keep him just the same, although he would have let him out long ago had it not been for the contract.

The little Napoleon strove hard to pass this red elephant to another manager, including Pat Moran, but hasn't been able. Everybody is wise to the contract.

Red Murray is also drawing good money under similar conditions. Me-Graw would like to tie a big can to him, but can t because of Red's con-
