Perhaps it would be well to point out that the transaction referred to occurred before the Act of 1890 was passed and has nothing to do with the change in the school system of this province which subsequently took place. There is no connection between the two subjects and the charge has been made by our opponents simply to prejudice the discussion of the school question.

As to your second question. There is no religious qualification whatever of a distinctive denominational character required in connection with the teaching staff of the public schools.
