Those of us who, a short time ago, hoped for a better turn of affairs in China, are sadly disappointed in these days of reactionary movements in which the dowager empress again figures so prominently. The old tea country will withstand the influence on Western civilization a while longer. But as far as tea is concerned the interest of consumers in the Maritime Provinces is centered elsewhere, for India and Ceylon supply most of the teas consumed nowadays. Ceylon is of especial interest just low, because of the fact that three best gardens in that island have contracted to sell all their output to J. E.
