

sion he described his feelings upon several occasions and his experiences upon others. He was in a vein of mad merriment, and as he said, "as happy as a fly."

His hilarity was contagious. Ada, who was appreciative of the ridiculous, was amused, and soon their laughter reached the loungers on the hotel verandah, and dispelled all suspicion of love-making between the two young people, the outlines of whose figures were indistinct.

W
su
cer
hir
in
a c
ma
in t
will
her
tha
mar
"
fami reas
C
had
chee
She
he fe
was