

"After leaving Churchill, under any circumstances, the east shore should be visited, and its mineral and other resources examined and reported on."

In a previous chapter, I have fully discussed the points raised in Mr. Gordon's recommendations. Some of them are good; but the Boulton plan upon which he is acting will never settle the question. I refer the reader, in relation to these matters, to Chapters XLVIII. and XLIX., pages 471 and 477, respectively, of this volume, which, I think, fully state the whole question.

THE END.
