

THE MELTING POT

A Play in Four Acts

BY

ISRAEL ZANGWILL

Small Demy 8vo, 2s. 6d. net.

THIRD EDITION.

Fortnightly Review.—"A wonderful play."

Daily Telegraph.—"The vignettes of a Jewish household in New York are delightful pieces of genre painting, rich in observation and knowledge of human nature, abounding in happy strokes of humour, and mellow with sympathy."

T. P. O'CONNOR, M.P.—"No one could be other than deeply moved by the splendid vision behind the play. 'The Melting Pot' is one of those rare plays which spring not from idle desire, love of gain or fame, but from the deeper depths of human consciousness. It is a prophetic play in the spirit of prophecy. This wonderful play stands in bold and splendid relief on our stage, and gives to Mr. Zangwill the same great place on the stage which he has held for so many years in the world of the novelist."

Pall Mall Gazette.—"All the characters are built up with countless touches of tenderness, humour and truth."

Truth.—"He is amongst our great, speaking with the voice of sincerity, informed by experience and inspired by understanding. 'The Melting Pot' has impressed me until eternity."

Daily Graphic.—"Mr. Israel Zangwill is far too great an artist to be a propagandist, and his sense of humour is keen. . . . The contrast of race and temperament has been drawn with infinite subtlety."

Evening Standard.—"Big thoughts and strong utterances. . . . Jew and Gentile are given an equally just hearing."

Westminster Gazette.—"Great material. . . . Mr. Zangwill is a man of genius. He has put his heart and its longings into this play and made it a song of the suffering and the hope of his race."

G. K. CHESTERTON (Illustrated London News).—"Mr. Zangwill is a great artist."

SIR HARRY JOHNSTON (The Daily Chronicle).—"One of the few really fine things that I had ever seen on the stage, and—one of the most educational. . . . Precious, indeed, is Mr. Zangwill's sense of humour, as precious as that of Dickens, and no one of his plays has been more deliciously infused with the realisation of the humorous aspect of all human emotions and doings than 'The Melting Pot.'"

H. W. NEVINSON (The Nation).—"Here is a new and vast idea presented with all the power of art, irony, tragedy, and dramatic situation. . . . To me the play is one of the greatest dramatic productions of our age . . . a grand theme, treated with almost prophetic seriousness, and illustrated by all the clash and movement of human passion such as the noblest drama has always demanded."

HOLBROOK JACKSON (The Bookman).—"Not since Walt Whitman wrote 'Leaves of Grass' have we had so inspiring a picture of America."

Athenaeum.—"Mr. Zangwill is called an idealist, but the word 'prophet' more fittingly describes the aspect in which he appears as the author of 'The Melting Pot.'"

Illustrated Sporting and Dramatic News.—"A great subject most greatly treated. Not merely enthralling as a play but will take its place in literature."
