MISSIONARIES, - - { D. J. GRAHAM,
 { HECTOR MACKAY.

Time in its flight has brought us to the beginning of another year, and with a deep sense of gratitude to God we have to report that although there has been a good deal of sickness among the adherents of the mission, there has not been a single death.

The work has been going on much the same as in the past. There have been regular services each Lord's day evening, and a weekly prayer meeting during the whole year.

In addition to these services a monthly missionary meeting was commenced early last spring, which is growing in interest. We have had short addresses by different persons on the different mission fields, and a resumé of missionary news; these are intended to create an interest in missions, and a band of mission workers is endeavouring to do something to send the gospel to those who have it not.

There has been a good deal of visiting; and worship has been conducted in the homes of those called upon and direct personal appeals made to them. As a result of such efforts, some who had not been to a place of worship for several years have been induced to attend public ordinances, and have given evidence of their sincerity by their changed lives.

The sick have been visited regularly while in their homes as well as in the hospitals.

Temporary cases of extreme need have been met through the liberality of friends and the grant from the Session.

It is with no small feeling of pleasure that we have to report the very marked change for the better in our Mission Hall, which is now so bright and cheerful since the alterations ordered by the Deacons' Court have been carried out.

Altogether, while there have been discouragements chiefly through the sin of drunkenness, the work has been going on quietly and smoothly, and we pray that the Lord of the harvest would send forth more labourers into His harvest.
