JESSAMINE.

With the resuscitation of the torpid intellect, came a flood of tears, mingled with anguished exclamations—an hysterical attack that only abated with her strength. By nine o'clock she was asleep, exhausted, but free from fever and the nervous spasms that had made the seizure alarming at first. The danger was tided over, for the present, and ere the rest separated for the night, Dr. Baxter returned thanks "the signal deliverance," kneeling between the husband and sister; besought comfort and peace for the smitten household in fervent, affectionate words, which showed that however his thoughts might stray from the subects to which his acquaintances would hold him his heart was always in the right place.

"I cannot thank you as I should for all you have been to us—all you have done for us!" said Eunice, as they talked of the morrow's parting.
"Do not, my dear! The privilege and the gratitude have been and are mine. God sent me to you. I bless him for

It was after sunrise when Jessie unclosed her eyes. Eunice's chair was still by her pillow, but it was empty. Her mind was clear. She had no dif-ficulty in recalling how the gentle hands had laid her to sleep; the mellow voice read to her from The Book—"A prayer of the afflicted, when he poureth out his heart before God." Dear Eunice! her love-tried as it had been by her perversity and reserve, her late violent and selfish distress was more precious than ever before. She would arise and share, if she could not lighten, her labors and her burdens. As she sat up in bed, she espied upon a lounge near by, a gentle-man's dressing-gown. The blood sprang to her cheeks in a burning tor-rent. for the truth flashed instantly upon her. Roy had asserted his right to the exclusive guardianship of his wife; had sent the weary sister to take the rest she needed, and himself kept watch over her through There came to her no softening thought of the anxious affection that had held his eyes waking while others slept. She was only angry, desperately indignant that he had dared sit there and watch her without knowledge and consent. The blind, mad moment passed, she stood, for many more, white as death—thinking! Then she locked the door. Roy might enter at any instant, or Eunice glide in to ask how she was, and she must be alone while she thought it all out! No mortal eye witnessed the fight for the next hour. The woman-torn and dashed by a of passions-verily believed, while they had the mastery, that she would not survive it. She never told the tale of her hurts to her dearest earthly friend. It was something she would not renew by relating, even when lapse of time had almost worn away the scars. She was made of sterner stuff than she knew. Ere she quitted her chamresolution was taken-every trace of the strife put out of sight. She "light enough to see the next If she were bound for life against her will and conscience, Roy was basely wronged-and through no fault he had committed against her. If her course were to be joyless—a straight and rough path, his was no smother or more delightsome. compense him for what she had lost for him, she could not, but she could and she would do her utmost to appear dutiful and resigned.

Fordham coming in from his brisk walk in the early morning air by which he had tried to make up for his vigil, found her in the parlor, arrang-ing the books upon bracket-shelves and dusting the rare old china bowls and vases which the sisters let no one but themselves handle. Her breakfast toilette had been carefully made, con-trasting strikingly with yesterday's neglige. Her rich hair was braided as she used to wear it, and banded with black ribbon; her white cambric dress was belted with the same, and loops of narrower hung from her mourning brooch. She comprehended all that had happened within the week; accepted the expediences and proprieties of her position with its sorrows and duties, and he honored her for it. Her attire showed that she consulted his taste, wished to be fair in his eyes, and for this he loved her better than ever, if that could be. He did not know it, but the woman he had wedded never, in her previous or subsequent life, gave another equal proof of strength of mind and purpose. as when physically faint and mentally distraught by the frightful ordeals she had already sustained, she lifted this, the heaviest cross of all, and adjusted it to her shoulders for a life-long journey.

The greeting between them was affactionate on his side-grave upon hers-very quiet on both, as befitted the circumstances of the household.
"Ah. Jessie, darling! I am glad you are well enough to be downstairs! But you are not exerting yourself too he exclaimed at his entrance. And-"I am much better, thank you! entirely able to be about as usual,' was the reply, uttered without the flicker of a blush.

Then he kissed the cheek that was neither averted nor offered. Dr. Baxter and Eunice appearing, a minute afterward saw nothing amiss. There may have been nothing, yet the young husband had looked for a different reception-now that his Jessie declared to be "quite herself was again.' He was a patient man and a considerate, and the secret disappointment was condemned as soon as recogment was condemned as soon as recog-nized. This was not the time for love-making—or—this was clearly Jessie's feeling. To oppose her scruple while her grief was so fresh and her nerves unsettled, would be persecution. She deserved all grace and indulgence at his hands, and she should have it. Their life—as theirs was all before them. He would be a help, not an embarrassment, to the orphans. Jessie loved him! Jessie was his wife! That was enough!

CHAPTER XVIII. Roy Fordham remained ten days longer in Dundee in consequence of an arrangement made by his brother professors, by which they divided his duties among them, Dr. Baxter, whose partiality for him was proverbial, taking a double share upon himself. The furlough was not accepted by him without misgivings. He felt that he ought to be in his place at the ginning of the college session, and that to avail himself further of the generous kindness of trustees and faculty, after a year's absence, was an abuse of the same. Dr. Baxter wrote him two strong, short letters, to refute this idead, and he found additional solace for his conscience in the discovery that he was needed by the sisters. Eunice and he were joint executors of Mr. Kirke's small property. To Jessie was left her mother's dowry with the accumulated interest; her mother's picture, and certain articles of jewelry, dress, and furniture, which had been hers. Everything else was Eunice's-a portion that did not nearly equal her sister's but with which she was more than content. The settlement of the estate was easily accomplished. The just man had no debts, and the few legal papers needed to secure the title of his possessions to his children were in perfect order.

At the end of a week the only open question was that of Eunice's residence. Roy had engaged a home in Hamilton, and was urgent in his desire that she should live with Jessie and himself. The conscientious elder sister hesitated in her knowledge that her income would not support her in like comfort anywhere else.

"My inclination leads me to follow Jessie," she confessed to her brotherin-law. "My sense of duty to myself and to you makes me doubt the propriety and justice of living in comparative idleness, when, if I had not the shelter of your roof, I must work to out a maintenance.'

Which quibble Roy pronounced absurd and far-fetched. "Quite unworthy of sensible Eunice! To say nothing of the manifest unkindness to our poor girl here," he said, as his wife entered the room where he was sitting. "Come here, love, and convince this unreasonable and sceptical woman that she is indispensable to our happiness.

Jessie yielded passively to the arm that drew her to his knee. "What is it?" she asked listlessly. Roy gave an abstract of the situa-confused-uncertain She looked . whether she had heard him aright. It was an effort to understand anything sometimes. Roy and Eunice glanced from her to one another. They saw that dazed look, heard her stam-mer oftener than either liked; dreaded nothing else so much as the repetition of the scenes attending their father's demise and burial. "Of course, she shall live with mewith us, wherever we go?" she re-joined. "Unlesss you object"—to Roy "But I was under the impression that you wished it—that the matter definitely arranged."

"It is now!" said Roy, confidently, and Eunice did not dispute it. There was a clear, more constant light in her eye, now that the responsibility of the decision was removed her, and the step determined upon without her vote. The prospect of separation from her sister was very painful, and there were other reasons why Hamilton should be a pleasant home to them all.

This was her representation of the case to herself and to her friends who lamented losing her. "Mourning is very becoming to Miss Kirke!" was the usual remark of these visitors upon leaving the parsonage. And—"She is really a most lovely woman. What will the congregation do without her?"

Roy was to leave them for a fortnight, to attend to his classes, and forward the preparations for the recepof his bride. When all was ready for their removal he would turn to superintend the sale of furniture, stock, etc., then take the sisters back to town with him.

PRICELESS JEWEL . WILLGIVE EVERYTHING TO RECOVER IT.

Health is a priceless jewel. Every body admits that. Yet the people who protect their gold by burglar alarms, and lock their diamonds in a steel vault, make not the least effort to protect the jewel they declare to be priceless. Some day they find the jewel is gone, stolen by thief Disease, and they are willing to give everything to get it back. The quickest and surest way to the recovery of lost health, is by the use of that radical and rational remedy, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Diseases which originate in the stomach must be cured through the stomach. A host of chronic sufferers who had "doctored" for years for a diseased heart, liver or spleen, have at last used "Golden Medical Discovery" for the blood, stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition, and found a perfect cure of the hitherto incurable ailments. The most convincing argument for a trial of the "Golden Medical Discovery" is that it has cured so many people "given up" by the doctors. There is no alcohol, cocaine, opium or other narcotic in "Golden Medical Discovery."

"I have long felt it my duty to acknowledge to you what your 'Golden Medical Discovery' and 'Favorite Prescription' have done for me," writes Miss Alice Hampton, of 199 East 4th St., Lexington, Ky. "I had intermittent fever (or fever and ague) one year before taking your medicines, and was pronounced incurable. Had a very had cough. My arms and shoulders would ache and sometimes I would feel so numb I thought I was dying. I had also a bad case of womb trouble from which I suffered great pain. Had it not been for Dr. Pierce's medicines I know I would have been in my grave. I have taken three bottles of each of your medicines."

Of the Grand Lodge Knights of Pythias.

Election of Grand Lodge Officers - Reports Presented-Will Meet in Windsor Next Year.

The grand lodge of the Knights of Pythias resumed session yesterday morning, with Grand Chancellor Murch in the chair. The committee on reports presented their report, stating that they had found them correct in every detail. They recommended that the supreme lodge make a fine on every grand lodge in arrears, of so much per day, and that a fine be placed on all lodges which have not got their reports in before March 1 and Sept. 1 of each year. Recommendation adopted.

The committee on the state of the order recommended that the exetcutive get a pamphlet printed and distributed to the lodges throughout the Dominion. They also recommended that during the coming term the grand chancellor should pay a visit to the district of Algoma and Port Arthur at some convenient time. This was agreed to.

A supplementary report was brought in by the judiciary committee, regarding the change in the grand lodge constitution in the matter of reinstatement of suspended members. It was decided to take advantage of the legislation passed by the supreme lodge at its last session, and a minimum sum was arranged, which lodges might incorporate in their bylaws to regulate the reinstatement of such members. They also brought in a report on the question of having the chairman of the judiciary, audit and printing committees made representatives of this grand lodge, and that they should be paid their mileage and per diem. This was carried as an amendment to the grand lodge constitution.

The meeting of the supreme lodge in Detroit in 1900 was brought up by Supreme Representative McConnell, who gave some suggestions regarding arrangements being made at once to provide funds in each lodge to cover the expenses of the trip. He would like to see the grand domain of Canada largely represented at that meeting. He urged the members to take up the matter as soon as possible

The election of grand lodge cers, resulted as follows: Grand Chancellor-Bro. J. S. Mackay. Woodstock. Grand Vice-Chancellor-Bro. L. M.

Jones, Toronto. Grand prelate-Bro. A. E. Domville, St. Thomas. Grand K. of R. and S .- Bro. W. G.

Grand Inner Guard-Bro. E. K. Barnesdale, Stratford. Grand Outer Guard-Bro. A. G. Mc-Donald, Bruce Mines. Grand Representative (two years)-Bro. R. H. McConnell. Grand Representative (one year) -

D. J. Pease. The afternoon session opened at 2:30, when it was moved by Bro. Morris, of Hamilton, seconded by Bro. Deverall, of Toronto, that the hearty thanks of the representatives present be tendered to the London brethren for the excellent entertainment they had provided for the delegates during their visit to the city. Unanimously carried.

On motion of Bro. J. P. McLeod, of Hamilton, seconded by Bro. Ironside, London, a vote of thanks was tendered to Bro. Jas. G. Wilson, of Toronto, for his services as press representative during the session.

officers were then installed by The P. G. C. Fitzgerald, assisted by Supreme Representative McConnell and P. G. Chancellor Ironside, of London. After a number of brief speeches had meen made by the new officers, the grand lodge closed, to meet in Windsor in 1900.

CHANGES AT QUEEN'S PARK

Extensive Improvements to Fair Grounds and Buildings-More Prize Money.

The most extensive improvements and additions to the fair buildings and grounds at Queen's Park that have been made since the buildings were erected there are now in progress, and will cost about $7,000. The grounds are being beautified by the laying out of new walks and drives, and the miniature lake has been restored. The agricultural, horticultural and dairy buildings have been converted into an immense building and enlarged by an addition 150 feet long. They are connected by one continuous covered passageway, 900 feet long. A large new building is in course of construction, to be occupied by telegraph, telephone, express, parcel delivery offices, and the city newspaper offices. There will also be a barber shop in this building. Machinery hall is being enlarged by an addition 60x80 feet, doubling its capacity and giving 4,800 square feet additional floor space. A new open grand stand 208 feet long will have a seating capacity for 5,-000 people. New exits and entrances have been provided for the old stands The swine and cattle building will also be considerably altered and improved. New platforms and entrances have been provided for all the buildings. A central band stand is also being built. All the new buildings and additions will be newly painted in har-mony with the other buildings. An addition of $1,500 has been made to the prize list, $1,000 of which will be added to the live stock prizes. A new style of prize list and special entry forms have been prepared, which will greatly simplify the work of classification, and prove a great convenience to both exhibitors and judges.

EVOLUTION.

[Rogersville Review.] A girl named plain "Mary" at her birth, dropped the "r" when she grew up, and became Miss May. As she began to shine in a social way, she changed the "y" to "e" and signed her letters Mae. About a year ago she was married, and now she had dropped the 'e" and it's just plain "Ma." That's evolution.
